

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS
DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

ON the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the plan for each Chronicle and historical document should be printed in such a manner as to represent with all accuracy and correctness the text of each writer, derived from the best MSS., and that no notes should be inserted, except such as were illustrative of the value of the original. They suggested, however, that the preface to each volume should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

PREFACE.

PREFACE.

THE history of the first three years of the reign of Richard I. was included by the author or editor of the "Gesta Regis Henrici," or "Chronicle of Benedict," in the work which forms the basis of the Compilation of Roger of Hoveden on the same period. The present volume containing the History of England and Richard from 1189 to the end of 1195, embraces this common portion, which fills about half of it. It will be desirable in order to complete the collation of the two authors attempted in the preface of the second volume, to notice briefly their principal variations, before proceeding to the more general historical considerations proper to this place. In doing this it is unnecessary to advert to the passages omitted by Hoveden in copying the earlier chronicle, except where they illustrate some point of importance or throw light on his additions and alterations. In the notes to this edition, as well as in the notes and margin of the Chronicle of Benedict which has preceded it in the present series, these have been carefully marked, and their general bearing already stated. The same indeed may be said of the alterations and additions of Hoveden, to which, wherever they touch questions of authorship or of chronology, attention has been given in the notes. The following is an attempt only at a classification of these places :—

1. The most important of Hoveden's additions are those which are concerned with the doings of Hugh de Puiset, bishop of Durham, and Geoffrey, archbishop of York. In these, even in places where our author has added nothing substantial to our information, he has often departed from the language of the previous writer and re-written the story in his own way; and it is clear from the sequel of his history that he was personally acquainted with most of the actors in it, and familiar, so familiar as to be careless occasionally, with the details. Under this head the most important independent additions are the passage (pp. 31, 32) narrating the first outbreak of personal violence between the archbishop and chapter of York; the account of the appointment of Osbert Longchamp to the sheriffdom (p. 34); the grant of Sadberge to the bishop of Durham (p. 38); the opening of the struggle between bishop Hugh and archbishop Geoffrey (pp. 168, 169); and its continuation under the judges delegate (pp. 171, 172). There is very little in Hoveden's way of narrating these circumstances that gives any clue to his real opinions on the subject. Probably he regarded them with the eye of a judicial historian, open to the faults of his heroes, and secure of their criticism. He is occasionally severe on the violence, quarrelsomeness, or underhand dealing of both: and he must have seen that men so unquiet and fickle in their friendships and enmities, were unsafe subject-matter for the praise or blame of a partizan. On the whole we may regard him as a friend of Hugh de Puiset against archbishop Geoffrey, and of Geoffrey against the party of John or of Longchamp, but otherwise an impartial, as he is certainly an unimpassioned, judge.

tions on the subject of the Long-
struggle.

2. A second most important, though scanty class of additions to our earlier information is that which includes the few details of the struggle between Longchamp and his rivals for power. The most valuable of these is the copy of the treaty between the two parties chiefly concerned, made at Winchester in July 1191 (pp. 135-137). The letter of Peter of Blois to Hugh of Nunant, upbraiding him with his treatment of the Chancellor (pp. 148-150), is valuable in its way, but the insertion of it cannot be ascribed to Hoveden, as it is not found in the best MSS., and bears marks of later intrusion in those in which it occurs. The whole details of this interesting crisis will be found examined with some minuteness in the later pages of this Preface, in which I have also embodied such remarks as seemed necessary on the variations between Hoveden and our other authorities, on Richard's plan of governing England in his absence on the Crusade.

Additional letter of Peter of Blois, not inserted by Hoveden.

3. The additional particulars touching the history of the Crusade are minute and numerous, but not very important or contributing much that is not found elsewhere, especially in the "Itinerarium" of Richard the Canon, a book which might very well be within Hoveden's reach. Some of these are interesting as indicating our author's love of the marvellous, particularly the story of the breaking of Richard's staff on the occasion of his investiture as a pilgrim at Tours (p. 36); and some of the details of the King's discussion with Abbot Joachim (pp. 75, 79). Of the actual additions to our knowledge the mention of the pope's brief, empowering Richard to grant licences of dispensation from the vow of the Crusade (p. 17); the short mention of Richard's visit to Gascony, which is also hinted at by Richard of Devizes,¹ and fixed to certain dates by existing charters (p. 35); the repairing of the ships at Messina, which had suffered from the devastations of the worm peculiar to the Sicilian Waters (p. 71); the

Additions on the history of the crusade.

¹ Ed. Stevenson, p. 12. "Regem reversum a Vasconia, ubi latrunculos armis dejecerat." This must be the visit referred to by Hoveden, iii. 35., and be placed between Easter and June. Richard, according to the letter preserved by R. de Diceto, 655, was at Bayonne on the 6th of June. This must then have been a second visit to his southern provinces, and is to be distinguished from the earlier one, during which the two charters were issued at La Reole, in February, to which reference is made in the note on Ben. Pet. ii. 109.

story of Isaac Comnenus, preserved at page 110; the negotiations with the Mesopotamian princes before and after the capture of Acre, which do not agree with the corresponding details in Benedict (pp. 115, 118); the letters of Richard containing the account of the battle of Arsouf (pp. 129-133); and the corrected version of the news from Palestine in the winter of 1191 (p. 181), may be regarded as the most valuable. Hoveden seems to have paid very careful attention to the history of the Crusade; his version of the Assize drawn up for the conduct of the pilgrims at Messina, is more full than his predecessor's (pp. 58-60); and he likewise gives a more complete copy of the treaty between Richard and Tancred, in which the former writer had retrenched the names of the sureties (p. 62). In these points, as well as in the few additional names of places on Richard's route (pp. 39, 41), the matter is a little complicated by the fact to which in the earlier prefaces I have more than once adverted, that our only MS. of Benedict in this part of his work was written by a man who had a copy of Hoveden before him; so that it may be questioned whether the discrepancies are to be ascribed to his habit of omitting or to Hoveden's habit of expanding. The general conclusion has been already stated,¹ and the particular cases are remarked upon in the notes as they occur. Of points of coincidence between Hoveden's additions and the Itinerarium, the chief are the identification of Alberic Clement² on the occasion of his martyrdom (p. 117), and the lodging of Philip in the Templars' palace at Acre³ (p. 123). In the numeration of the Saracens massacred after the capture (p. 128), Hoveden nearly doubles the computation of the Itinerarium⁴. His account of Richard's narrow escape from capture at Joppa in September, 1191, is perhaps borrowed from the same work.¹ But it is not necessary to press these cases, in which there is no correspondence in verbal detail, and in which both writers may have drawn from a common source. Hoveden's list of the deaths of the Crusaders varies in some important points from Benedict's, which is both more full and more accurate, so far as we have the means of judging. Two or three obscure names are added, but several more, and those, curiously enough, which are especially connected with Yorkshire and Lincolnshire are omitted.²

Hoveden's agreement with the Itinerarium.

4. Closely connected with this subject are the details preserved by Hoveden of the journey of Eleanor to Messina and her return by way of Rome. The fact of her undertaking to plead the cause of Geoffrey with pope Celestine III. (p. 100) is especially interesting³; but the importance of the story depends chiefly on its bearing on Hoveden's authority for the particulars touching the coronation of Henry VI., and the destruction of Tusculum (pp. 100-105). In these, as is well known, his testimony stands alone, and is scouted by the foreign historians who have examined the subject. Without venturing to disagree with them, I may say that, after all, Hoveden's informant probably picked up his information on the spot; that not only the queen's retinue, but a number of York clergy must have been at the time at Rome;⁴ and that the recital is not to be regarded as a mere fable, but as one of those traveller's tales, perversions or misrepresentations of real events, of which the ³ I must here correct an error which I made in editing Benedict, as to the purpose of Eleanor's visit to Rome, B. P. ii. 161 note ¹; where for preuent should be read procure.

⁴ See Gir. Cambr. V. Galfr. :

Anglia Sacra, ii. 387. The mere improbability of an event which could be witnessed only by a very limited circle of bystanders is no objection to its truth. What could be more improbable than that the peer who rolled down the steps of the throne at Queen Victoria's coronation should be Lord Rolle?

Information about Rome. Roman cicerone has been in all ages somewhat prolific. That Hoveden, moreover, had information about and took interest in the secular government of Rome appears later on from his account of the senatorship (p. 270).

Spanish geography. 5. Next to these may be noted the numerous particulars of Spanish geography and history, which are given by our author in addition to the somewhat full details of the same sort found in the work of his predecessor. They are too numerous and far too remote from our immediate subject to be considered here; but considering the scarcity of our information on the point and the poverty of all attempts at a map of Mediæval Spain, the perfect survey of the seaboard given at p. 47 and the following pages, and also at p. 177, must be of considerable value. The story of the loves of Sancho of Navarre and the Moorish princess is less important, except as showing how very short a time is taken in the process of the circumstantial elaboration of a myth.¹

Statements anticipating Richard's captivity. 6. It is not necessary to do more than refer here to the passages in which the events that preceded Richard's captivity are read by Hoveden by the light of those which followed it; especially the visit of Philip to Rome and his negotiations with Henry VI. On these points, as they affect the relation between Hoveden and the earlier writer, enough has been said in the prefaces to Benedict and to the first volume of Hoveden.²

Hoveden's habit of massing his information. 7. I have called attention in the notes to several places in which Hoveden, by massing the information which he abridged from his predecessor's work, has either run into error, or at all events given a different impression from that given by the earlier writer. The most important instances are those at p. 7, touching the honours bestowed on John, and at p. 23, in which the dates of the consecrations of the new bishops of 1189 are confused. It is more than probable that some such carelessness has led to the difficulties attending his account of the committees of regency appointed at different times by Richard before his departure on the Crusade, on which more will be said by-and-by.

It has produced confusion here and there.

8. I may mention here one place in which Hoveden seems to have corrected a mistake of his predecessor. The latter writer giving an account of the council held by Richard in London, in November 1189, mentions William Mandeville as one of the persons who swore in the king's name to observe his engagement with Philip for the opening of the Crusade. Now William Mandeville had in the previous month been sent to Normandy, where he died on the 14th of November. It is then almost certain that in substituting the name of William Marshall for that of William Mandeville our author has made a decided improvement on the text of his exemplar. At the same time it is quite possible that the error is merely one of transcription. The singularity of the case speaks highly for the authority of the earlier book.¹

An error corrected by Hoveden.

9. There remains a class of small additions not referable to any single head, such as the mention of the confiscation of the goods of Geoffrey Ridel,² bishop of Ely, who died intestate (p. 7), and the bestowal of the deanery of S. Martin-le-Grand on William of S. Mere l'Eglise (p. 16). These may fairly be considered as contributions from Hoveden's personal knowledge of the facts, as they are not noticed in Benedict. Closely akin to these are such minute additions, as the explanation of the name of Finisterre, as "de fine Posternæ."³ The older writer contented himself with the obvious explanation "de finibus Terræ." Hoveden possibly had drawn his new one from Jordan Fantosme, who makes

Henry II. say in one place that the barons of Brittany are in his power, "tres qu'en fine Busterne."¹ He has, however, if this be so, confounded Finisterre in Spain with Finistère in Brittany. In his account of the coronation of Richard, Hoveden interpolates two or three particulars: the spreading of woollen cloth all the way from the king's chamber to the altar (p. 9); the offering of a mark of gold as the regular oblation of the king on such occasions (p. 11);² and the explanation of the anointing in its symbolical meaning (p. 10). Of these the first is possibly a fact of his own knowledge; the second he would find in the rubric of the coronation service; and the third is a repetition of an explanation laid down by S. Thomas in a letter given in a previous part of the work.³ The discrepancies occurring in the two accounts of the ceremony are remarked on in the notes. Some little attention is required in the examination of such minute points, in which it will be found that Hoveden generally adds only matter of extremely small importance; and even where he seems to be adding, often only quotes from another page of his original. An instance of this habit will be found at page 167,⁴ where his fixing the position of Godstow as between Oxford and Woodstock, is not an addition made from his knowledge of the country but simply to be ascribed to the transposition of the clause from another part of Benedict's work.⁵

² Compare the rubric "Deinde offeret marcam auri" in the early coronation office given by Maskell, Monumenta Ritualia, iii. 42. The order for the coronation may also have contained the mention of the cloth spread for the procession to walk on, as is the case in the office for the coronation of a queen (ibid.

p. 53), and in the order for the coronation of Richard II. (ibid. 68).

⁵ Benedict, ii. 240. The same may be said of his notice of the death of Ralph Hauterive, archdeacon of Colchester, Hoveden, iii. 87. The name had been given before, p. 70, from Benedict, ii. 142.

10. The two largest independent additions made to the earlier book are the two chapters on Antichrist (pp. 80–86), of which enough is said in the notes ; and the hymn on the opening of the Crusade, at page 37. After careful investigation of the probable sources of the latter I have been unable to form any other conjecture as to the authorship than that it may have been the work of that Monachus of Florence, who wrote the much longer poem on the siege of Acre, in the same metre, which I have reprinted in the appendix to this preface.

This very valuable relic of contemporary history was unknown to me when I edited the Itinerarium of Richard the Canon, with whose work it has much in common, and might have been published in connexion. On finding a portion of it in an Oriel manuscript, and almost immediately after, the poem in its integrity, in Herold's Appendix to the continuation of William of Tyre, I determined to prepare it to accompany, by way of commentary, the present account of Richard's Crusade. Between that time and the present it was printed privately by M. Paul E. D. Riant, at Lyons ; and I have had the benefit of his collations and valuable literary researches as to its authorship. Whilst I am obliged to differ in some respects from his conclusions, I think it right to put on record how very much I admire his careful investigation, and the exhaustive manner in which he has treated the subject.

the MSS. of Hoveden.

The mutual relations of the MSS. used in the preparation of this edition of Hoveden, and described in the preface to the first volume, continue to be throughout the present portion of the work much the same as before. MSS. B., D., and I., generally agree, except where D. has omitted or abridged, often from carelessness. MS. G. continues to be a faithful and intelligent transcript of A., until nearly the close of the volume, where it begins to abridge documents in a way that detracts much from its value, and which becomes more marked as we approach the end of the work. MS. C. is so much abridged, and so imperfect, as to be absolutely useless for the purpose of collation.

noted by Sir
F. Madden.

Before finishing the literary portion of the preface I must be allowed to thank Sir Frederick Madden¹ for having pointed out a mistake into which I had fallen through too hasty generalization: I said in the preface to the first volume that the work of Hoveden was unknown to Roger of Wendover and Matthew Paris.² This is a misstatement. I believe that it is true to say that for the portion of history common to Hoveden and Benedict, that ending in 1192, these two authors used the latter only. For the later years of Richard's reign they must have used Hoveden, as will appear in detail in the fourth volume. Having carefully examined into the former point, I had unwittingly overlooked the passages towards the end of Hoveden, the language of which is identical with that of Matthew Paris.

known work published at Paris in 1837 by M. Louis Paris, under the title of "Chronique de Rains." The portion I had selected was the story of the discovery of Richard by the minstrel Blondel; for which this is first authority. On reading over, however, my MS. for the press, the work appeared to me to be too fabulous and frivolous for any part to be introduced into a book of real history, and I content myself with referring the curious reader to M. Paris's edition.

The interest of the internal history of Richard's reign is only very slightly indebted to the personal action of the king. His influence is felt only as a remote and varying pressure, affecting the amount and impact of taxation, the placing and displacing of ministers. The island kingdom, irrespective of its function as supplying revenue, lies very much out of the sphere of his political plans, and owes nothing to any paternal care or special exercise of sagacity on its behalf. He originated no reforms; he did not even interest himself in such things so far as to reverse the measures of his father. He had no policy of government, and for his policy of aggression England satisfied him by contributing money.

His personal interest in England.

Henry's early idea of dividing his dominions among his sons had this, among other indirect effects: Henry, Richard, and Geoffrey were exposed to all the temptations of a sovereign position without the absolute liberty of action which would have left them free to find work for themselves. Whilst other princes of their age were learning experience and sowing wild oats in the Crusades, they were exercising substantial power as the colleagues or vassals of their father in England, Normandy, Aquitaine, and Brittany. Their education, such as it was, was carried on amidst the people whom they were to govern, and, as is usual in such cases, their characters were formed by the moral and political tone of their provincial courts. Henry became the ally, the hero and the victim of the feudal party in England and Normandy; Geoffrey developed the Angevinity—the dishonesty, turbulence, and general want of principle which marked his grandfather's line; Richard, the faults and the brilliancy of the Poictevin. Throughout his life he is amenable in a remarkable way to the personal authority and national influences of his mother.

His birth, nurture, and early pro-

Richard was born in England,¹ and nursed by an Englishwoman;² but there his personal interest in England seems to determine. At a very early age he was marked out as the heir of Eleanor.³ When he was two years old his father planned for him a marriage with the daughter of the queen of Arragon, one of the terms of which was the settlement of the duchy of Aquitaine on the infant couple.⁴ In 1165 his mother brought him from England into Normandy.⁵ At Epiphany 1169 he did homage to Lewis VII. for the duchy of Aquitaine;⁶ the following year he received it as his share of his father's dominions, when, in the expectation of death, Henry, at Mote de Ger, ^{He becomes Duke of Aquitaine in 1171.} divided them among his elder sons.¹ In 1171 he joined with his mother in laying the foundation of the church of S. Augustine at Limoges.² On Trinity Sunday the same year he was installed as duke in the abbatial seat of S. Hilary at Poitiers, receiving the lance and banner from the bishop John of Poitiers, and the archbishop of Bourdeaux, and having the hymn, "O princeps egregie," sung in procession. The same year he was invested at Limoges with the ring of S. Valeria, the protomartyr of the Gauls;³ and in 1173 he received the homage of the count of Toulouse, being then sixteen.⁴

By that unhappy fate which attended his family, he ^{His wars with his father.} fought his first campaign as duke of Aquitaine, against his father, under the influence of his mother and her advisers Ralph de Fai and Lewis VII.⁵ From the time of the pacification Richard, unlike his elder brother, recovered his hold on his share of the inheritance, and from his eighteenth year administered Aquitaine with very slight control from his father.⁶ In the apparently conflicting statements of Giraldus that during this period he showed great powers of organization, reducing the disorderly nobles to subjection, extending the boundaries, and improving the laws of his states;¹ and those of Benedict and Thomas Agnellus,² that he governed capriciously and tyrannically, that he was "malus omnibus, suis peior, pessimus sibi,"³ we trace an element of agreement. His policy was, like his father's, directed to the humiliation of the barons who had enjoyed under the weak and luxurious princes who preceded Eleanor an almost unbridled licence; and to the creation of a really independent sovereignty. The complaints of his treatment of the wives and daughters of the nobles, show, if they were true, that he followed in other respects the traditions of his mother's house too faithfully. By the barons of Aquitaine the younger Henry, who had been the stalking horse of the baronage in Normandy and England, was called in against Richard.⁴ His death opened the way for his brother to higher honours, but Richard's relations with the great vassals of the duchy were throughout his life the same; and the stand which during his father's life he made against them without help from abroad abundantly vindicates his character for perseverance and military skill. ⁴ Richard's enemies are the same throughout his career. They are enumerated by Benedict, i. 115, and much of their history may be learned from Geoffrey of Vigeois.

The barons of Poictou seem to have had an admitted right of making private war; at least Richard on with a wide network of alliances amongst the almost inaccessible lordships of the Pyrenees, afforded him work and discipline enough, not to speak of the claims on Auvergne and Toulouse, which could, if enforced, have brought only an empty homagè. Two short visits, one in 1176,¹ and another in 1184,² seem to be the sum of his opportunities for making acquaintance with England, during the twenty years that preceded his accession to the crown.

He visits England only twice before his accession.

Untrained to English ways, and exempt for the most part from the influence of English factions, Richard must have seen that his best policy was to leave the kingdom alone, to be governed on his father's principles, and to develop resources which might enrich him without giving him trouble. But he must have underrated the personal influence of his father if he trusted that the institutions which he had created would act by themselves, or answer to the handling of new, inexperienced workmen. Henry's influence had been felt directly everywhere, and his servants had been educated under him, or had grown with him into the knowledge of their work. Richard's first attempt was to manage by new men a system which was far from maturity, and would not bear rough or indiscriminate usage. The elements which had supplied Henry's early difficulties survived, although weakened and disarmed. Much of one occasion alleged it to Philip as an excuse for not using compulsion with them (Hoveden, iii. 255); but this must be distinguished from the constant trouble which the mala consuetudines of the Pyrenean counts and barons gave him, who were really patrons of banditti who lived on the plunder of pilgrims to Compostella. See Ben. Pet. i. 132. Ric. Devizes, p. 12. Hoveden, iii. 35, 36.

¹ In 1176 he landed on Good Friday at Southampton, spent Easter at Winchester, and almost immediately returned to Poictou. Ben. Pet. i. 115, 120.

² In 1184 he came to England in November, stayed over Christmas, which he spent at Windsor with the king, and sailed from Dover before New Year's Day 1185. Ben. Pet. i. 319, 333, 334.

His system was a rude test of his father's policy.

the influence which his great ministers exercised over the baronage was personal quite as much as official. It might be a question whether after his guiding hand was removed, the old administrators could have successfully maintained their position and his policy. Richard's initial measures, and the results which followed them during the years which he spent on crusade and in captivity, were such as to try very cruelly the fabric which his father had raised.

The history of the reign is really the history of the ministers.

The English history of the reign is then the history not of Richard, but of his ministers; of the administrations of his four successive justiciars, William Longchamp,¹ Walter of Coutances, Hubert Walter, and Geoffrey FitzPeter. The importance of the first two of these is of a political, that of the latter, of a constitutional character. But the survey of a period which coming between Henry II. and John, must necessarily have witnessed a great growth of national life, and which contains other elements of interest which have engrossed the attention of contemporaneous and later historians, to the exclusion of the less romantic topics, deserves examination in detail.

His imprudent choice of ministers, and provision for John and Geoffrey.

The seeds of the difficulties of the first three years of the reign were sown by Richard himself during the few months that followed his coronation, in the choice of the ministers who were to govern England during the crusade, and in the measures taken for securing the good behaviour of John and Geoffrey. In neither of these respects can Richard be charged with any greater fault than political short-sightedness. The events that illustrate them begin from the very moment of his father's funeral.

No sooner was the body of Henry consigned to the tomb at Fontevraud than the question arose how were the new and old relations of his successor to be reconciled; how was he to treat those who had been faithful to his father on principles which would make them not less faithful to himself, and how to reward those who had been his friends on principles which would from the moment of his succession make them his enemies. First and foremost of these classes came his brothers, the faithful Geoffrey and the faithless John; after them the whole roll of the baronage; on the one side, Ranulf Glanvill and Stephen of Turnham, with the rest of Henry's servants; on the other, Ralph of Fougères, Juell of Mayenne,¹ and the rest who had deserted the father to make capital in the service of the son. Richard's first thought was to revenge himself on his father's friends; but it was a short-lived idea, and gave way so soon to better feelings that the two on whom the first brunt of his hasty anger fell, seem to have become, as soon as their punishment was over, his most faithful friends.² Stephen Turnham³ and Ranulf Glanvill⁴ were compelled to purchase his goodwill by heavy fines; but those paid, the former was restored to his post as steward of Anjou, and Glanvill, although he was not suffered to retain the justiciarship, attended the court as a counsellor until his departure for the crusade, on which he died. Towards those who had deserted Henry in his last difficulties, Richard adopted different conduct: dispossessed them of their estates, and treated them as his own enemies. The lords of Fougères and Mayenne continued during his

The requirements of revenge and justice being satisfied, the new sovereign seems to have determined to bind to himself by gifts and promises all the leaders, or would-be leaders, of the parties which his own quarrels with his father had, if not created, at least furnished with opportunities for organization. the county of Mortain, in Normandy, which had been the property of king Stephen, and had escheated on the death of his son William in 1159,¹ and the promise of a revenue of 4,000*l.* a year² from lands in England, with daughters do not seem to have made any claim; it was in the king's hands in 1180, and he had in fact bought off Count Matthew's claim in 1168. See Stapleton, Norman Rolls, i. pp. lxiii., cxliii. Benedict distinctly says that the county was given by Richard to John on the occasion of his investiture as duke of Normandy, July 20, 1189. B. P. ii. 73.

² Ben. Pet. ii. 73. M. Paris, 152. This promise of 4,000*l.* a year in land, was not regarded as fulfilled by the bestowal of the counties shortly after mentioned, although it is nearly the sum at which their revenues may be valued; we find that in 1195, when John

To all this were added, as soon as the brothers arrived in England, the several castles and honours of Marlborough, Lancaster, Ludgarshall, and the Peak, the castle of Bolsover, the town and honour of Nottingham, the honours of Wallingford and Tickhill, and the county of Derby with the Peverell fee.¹ It is to be observed that this enumeration of the endowments should be construed exactly as detailed by Benedict and abridged by Hoveden. In a few cases the castle and honour are given together, but in the more important ones, Tickhill, Wallingford, and the impregnable one of Nottingham,² the honour is given without the castle; the hold of the crown is maintained on these castles as well as that of Gloucester, a matter that has much significance in its relation to later events.³ Not content with this enormous accession of territory, John received in addition, before Richard's departure from England, the counties of Devon, Dorset, Somerset, and Cornwall.⁴ Bestowal of honours and castles on John.

had been removed from the government of the counties, his income from the exchequer was 8,000*l.* Hoveden, iii. 286. But unfortunately for Richard's character as a liberal brother, the 8,000*l.* are in Angevin money and only equal to 2,000*l.* sterling. However, it is clear that whilst he was in charge of the counties, he was receiving a large sum from the exchequer. R. Devizes, p. 26.

Immediately after the coronation Richard held a great council at Pipewell, at which he filled up the vacant church preferments, and changed the sheriffs of the counties in contemplation of the Michaelmas session of the Exchequer. In the former class of appointments we trace the working of several natural influences. His father's servants, Hubert Walter, the nephew of Glanvill; Richard FitzNeal, the treasurer of the Exchequer; Godfrey, the son of Richard of Lucy the loyal,¹ were secured by bishoprics; and William of S. Mere l'Eglise, the prothonotary, by a rich stall at York. To his own personal servant, William Longchamp, he gives a bishopric; to the brother of William Marshall, who had been the intimate friend and companion of his brother Henry, the deanery of York. The old bishop of Durham is propitiated by the bestowal of the treasurer-ship of the same church, which had been held by his cousin S. William and himself, in succession, on his nephew Bouchard de Puiset; and the services of the Champagne connexion, still so strong both in France and in England, were further secured by the nomination of Henry de Soilli,² to the abbacy of Glastonbury. In all these, a prudent regard to existing personal or political interests is distinguishable.

The secular appointments were not bestowed with similar circumspection, although the marriages and wardships in the hands of the crown were distributed on much the same principle. Amongst the latter class of preferments, William Marshall got the heiress of the earldom of Strigul; the son of Roger FitzRainfrai, the heiress of the barony of Kendal;¹ William Longchamp, the wardship of Stephen Beauchamp.² But with the official posts it was otherwise. The place of Ranulf Glanvill was filled by two old statesmen, Hugh de Puiset, bishop of Durham, and William Mandeville, earl of Essex and count, in the right of his wife, of Aumâle, the most faithful servant of Henry II.;³ and this change of the head of the administration was followed by a clean sweep in the sheriffdoms. It is not clear whether this was done at Pipewell, or a fortnight later at the Michaelmas exchequer; probably it was arranged at the former place, and carried into execution in the latter. The changes seem to imply an imprudent desire on Richard's part to carry with him most of the leading members of his father's government; a desire that was aided by the fact that most of these were already under a vow of crusade, which under a king who was himself an ardent crusader, and who had obtained from the pope the privilege of commuting the vows of his subjects for a money payment, was not likely to be redeemed without enormous cost.¹ In a few cases some method may be traced. In Yorkshire Ranulf Glanvill gives way to John Marshall, the old king's friend to the new ;² in Herefordshire Ralph Arden, Glanvill's son-in-law, is replaced by Henry Longchamp, the chancellor's brother. Such appointments strengthened no doubt the hands of the king's personal friends. Others, however, must have seriously weakened the administration.

Purchase of sheriffdoms and castles.

Amongst these the foremost are the purchase of sheriffdoms by three of the bishops : Hugh de Puiset, of Durham, buys Northumberland for 2,000 marks ;³ Godfrey de Lucy, by a single fine, obtained for himself the county of Hampshire, with the castles of Winchester and Porchester, his own inheritance, and indemnity for the treasure of his church ;⁴ Hugh of Nunant, bishop of Coventry, was allowed to take for a smaller fine the sheriffdoms of Leicestershire, Stafford-

Geoffrey Fitz-Peter, William Briewere, and Hugh Bardolf bought of the king a licence to stay at home. R. Dev., p. 8. Hugh Bardolf is mentioned as being at Messina in November, 1190 ; Hoveden, iii. 62 ; and even William Marshall must have been there early in 1191, if we are to take literally the words of Benedict, ii. 158, Hoveden, iii. 96. Yet he was acting as a judge in England very shortly before (Mon. Angl. i., 391) ; perhaps he accompanied and returned with Eleanor.

shire, and Warwickshire.¹ The counties bestowed on John were withdrawn from the ordinary administration of the government. Gerard Camville, one of his sworn followers, for 700 marks, entered on the sheriffdom of Lincolnshire; ^{weakening of the government in consequence.} Hugh of Nunant was also his personal adherent. Of the other counties, only seven or eight retained their old sheriffs, and only five of the old sheriffs² found places in the same capacity: these were old servants of the State, not likely to become politically dangerous. But the changes in the sheriffdoms are not to be imputed solely to Richard's wish to carry with him to Palestine all the men of mark; in some cases the office was doubtless bought. Those officers who were removed were not disgraced, for out of them, after making them pay heavily for the commutation of their vows, Richard chose the chief advisers of the regency. The great offices of State were, moreover, paid for by their fortunate holders; Hugh de Puiset paid at least a thousand marks for his share of the justiciarship,⁴ and William Longchamp, although the king's confidant, paid three thousand for the chancery, notwithstanding that the bishop of Bath bid a thousand more.⁵ Other very large sums were levied on the barons and bishops for the ratification of rights and confirmation of their tenure of estates, the greatest bargain being that made by the king of Scots, who, for a payment of 10,000*l.*, emancipated himself from the conditions imposed on him by Henry II. in 1175. But the object of these latter sales was merely the raising of money. ^{Sale of the Justiciarship and Chanceryship.}

By such means Richard endeavoured to secure peace during his absence from Europe; his policy was to work the governmental machinery by men who were not likely to be dangerous, to bribe by large benefactions those whose claims might have made them so, to bind those who had invested their treasure so largely in public appointments, to the maintenance of public security, to carry away with him as much as possible of the money which might have sustained private wars, and as many as possible of those members of the feudal baronage whose possessions were so large or their traditions so continuous as to render them jealous of royal authority. But before he left England he had reason to see that all this would be futile. The death of William Mandeville in November left the justiciarship vacant, for Hugh de Puiset could not be trusted to act alone—nay, it was a question whether the king ever seriously intended him to act in this capacity at all. The archbishop-elect of York had quarrelled with his clergy and fallen into disgrace with Richard, and it was found necessary to secure John with further gifts. The king was, however, in a hurry to embark, and perhaps not unwilling to leave matters to settle themselves. The bishop of Durham was left as justiciar, but with the chancellor, Hugh Bardulf and William Briewere as colleagues.¹ Further questions were to be settled at a council in Normandy before the pilgrimage to the East began.

dications of its failure.

The justiciars quarrel.

Richard left England on the 11th of December. Almost immediately after his departure the chancellor and justiciar quarrelled. The bishop of Durham saw pointed at Pipewell. It is not improbable that Hugh was really the chief justiciar for the short time that intervened between the king's departure and his summons to Normandy.

that the bishop of Ely was intended to hold the substance of power, whilst, even if faith were to be kept with himself, there would be left him only the shadow, the expense, and the responsibility. To him the castle of Windsor had been intrusted; but to the chancellor the Tower of London.¹ Longchamp was not indisposed for a struggle; he declined to admit the presence of the bishop of Durham at the Exchequer,² or to recognize him as in charge of the county of Northumberland. No reason is given for this, but the probable one is, that the bishop had not actually paid the money offered for the county,³ and that the chancellor acted under Richard's orders. At the same time, however, he dispossessed the bishop of Winchester of the honours he had purchased, and even of his own inheritance, on which he had so lately entered.⁴ In this case the desire of getting both the sheriffdom and the castles into the hands of the government probably operated. As for the bishop of Coventry, it was thought sufficient to proceed against him in the ecclesiastical court, and obtain an injunction from the archbishop of Canterbury against his holding a sheriffdom.⁵

The seemingly arbitrary conduct of the Chancellor dictated by policy, perhaps prescribed by Richard.

The Chancellor quarrels with the bishops of Durham, Winchester, and Coventry.

When in the month of February or early in March the king held his council in Normandy, complaints on all these grounds were laid before him. Most of the leading men in England attended; the chief business he renders account for Warwickshire and Leicestershire for half a year, and Hugh Bardulf for the second half, and in 1191 Hugh Bardulf accounts for the whole year in Warwickshire and Leicestershire, whilst the Bishop has had Staffordshire for a whole year. It would seem then that he had obeyed the Archbishop's command as long as he lived. In 1192 he accounts for all the three counties.

⁵ See the letter from Archbishop Baldwin to the Bishop of London, in R. Diceto, 652: Hugh had at Rouen promised to resign his sheriffdom within a fortnight after Easter. In the Roll of the 2nd of Richard I,

The justiciarship divided.

done was the appointment of the chancellor as justiciar of England, the bishop of Durham's jurisdiction being confined to the north of the Humber;¹ John and Geoffrey were sworn not to return to England for three years. Hugh of Nunant undertook before the archbishop to give up his secular office. Measures were also taken to obtain for the chancellor the office of legate in the absence of archbishop Baldwin.

Longchamp to be legate.

Difficulties of Longchamp's task.

Notwithstanding the great powers with which Longchamp was now invested, the task which he undertook was probably as difficult a one as ever fell to the lot of any minister. He was, indeed, trusted by his master, but he could have hardly trusted Richard out of his sight, knowing how uncertain were the expedients of his fickle policy, how easily he was imposed upon, and how his inveterate extravagance laid him open to intrigues in which money would be too powerful a temptation for him to resist. The condition of England was anything but bettered by Richard's policy. The great earls of Chester and Leicester, the great minister Glanvill, and his colleagues Bertram de Verdun, Gilbert Pipard, and others, the great bishops Hubert of Salisbury, and Walter of Rouen, were indeed gone; and John and Geoffrey were sworn to stay away. But the uneasiness was not removed with them; the sources of disturbance were in the very atmosphere of society. The removal of the great men made the country more difficult to manage, the balance more difficult to adjust. Hugh de Puiset had made himself a comfortable principality in the north, where the justiciarship of the whole province was added to his ordinary and palatine jurisdiction as bishop, and the newly-purchased earldom or sheriffdom of Northumberland. John had an equally compact, though less extensive, dominion in the west; and in the middle of England, he and his friends possessed a band of jurisdictions and castles reaching through the counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, Warwick, and Stafford. Although many, if not all, the towns in this midland territory were faithful to the crown, and some of the castles were still retained by the king as a check on his brother, the whole of the ordinary jurisdiction was withdrawn from the direct action of the justiciar. John's own counties rendered no account at the Exchequer, and their judicial business was managed by his own justiciar; in the shires under Hugh of Nunant and Gerard Camville, the influence of the justiciar could not be available without the co-operation of the sheriff. The chancellor could regard only the east and south-east of England as really amenable to his authority. Any attempt to exert it beyond these limits would necessarily lead to a complication with one or all of his rivals.

Localisation of parties.

Withdrawal of John's counties from the ordinary jurisdiction of the justiciar.

Hugh de Puiset was a man whose ancestors had been accustomed to deal on an equality with kings, and to give them no small trouble. He was, in all probability, the son of that Hugh de Puiset,¹ viscount of Chartres, Ancestry of Hugh de Puiset.

¹ It is impossible to speak with entire certainty of the parentage of Hugh de Puiset, but I believe the following to be the truth. I should say that the whole pedigree of the Puisets is difficult to make out. The Puisets were lords of the castle of that name, near Chartres, and the head of the family was hereditary Viscount of Chartres. I. Ebrard, Viscount of Chartres and his wife Hunbergis were the parents of Hugh de Puiset, Viscount of Chartres, and Adelaide the wife of Roger Montgomery the ally of William the Conqueror (Cartulaire de S. Pere de Chartres, 159. Ord. Vit. v. 13.)

II. Hugh de Puiset, viscount of Chartres, married Adelaide of Montlheri, sister of Guy de Rochfort, dapifer to the king of France. He was viscount in 1096 and had three sons, Ebrard, Hugh, and Guy, and a daughter Hunbergis. Cartulaire, &c. p. 240. III. Of these three sons, Guy was viscount of Etampes; Hugh married Mamilia de Rency and went to the Holy Land about 1106. (Will. Tyr. xiv. 15.) Ebrard went on the first crusade and took part in the siege of Antioch in 1097. (W. Tyr. vi. 4. Alb. Aq., 236, 255.) IV. The next viscount of Chartres is Hugh who had for many years defied the power of Lewis VI. Another Hugh de Puiset, his cousin,¹ had nearly produced a revolution in Palestine; another ancestor, Bouchard of Corbeil, had attempted to wrest the crown of France from Philip I.² Hugh himself was a great-grandson of William the Conqueror; nephew of Stephen, of Henry of Winchester, and Theobald of Champagne; cousin to both Richard I. and Philip II. Adelidis, the mother of one at least of the bishop's children, was a lady of the great house of Percy,³ and this connexion added the de Puiset, the enemy of Lewis VI., who is described by Abbot Suger as the nephew of Guy of Etampes, and son of the countess Adelaide of Corbeil. (Opp. Suger. ed. Le Coy de la Marche, p. 70.) His father had gone on the first crusade. He was, then, the son of Ebrard who died at Antioch, and as viscount, agrees with the abbot of S. Pierre for the commemoration of his father Ebrard as soon as the day of his death is known. (Cartulaire, &c., 452.) V. This Hugh had a wife Agnes, and two sons, Ebrard and Bouchard. (Cart., p. 412.) Of whom Ebrard was viscount of Chartres 1143. (Cart., 644; Bouquet, xv. 493.) VI. The next viscount is Hugh de Puiset, count of Bar, son of Ebrard (Ben. Pet. i. 278) and nephew of Hugh de Puiset, bishop of Durham. Therefore bishop Hugh must have been a younger son of Hugh and Agnes, and Agnes must have been an unknown daughter of Count Stephen of Blois and Adela the daughter of William the Conqueror. This pedigree which has given me a good deal of trouble, will be found to agree with the charters and historians, but not with the deductions of the French genealogists, who rather ignore bishop Hugh. In addition to the references given above, compare Martene and Durand, Amplissima Coll., i. 774; Bouquet, xv. 493; Duchesne, iv. 528. The identification of Hugh the viscount, as the son of Ebrard, is proved by the charter of the abbey of S. Pierre, in which he refers to his imprisonment; Cart., &c., 452; Suger, pp. 73, 76; and that of his son Ebrard by the letter of Lewis VII. Cart., &c., 644.

² Suger, V. Ludov. VI. p. 80. He was slain by Stephen of Blois. Ib. 81. He was father of Adelaide the wife of Ebrard, and grandmother of the bishop.

influence of her family to the other sources of the bishop's strength. One of his sons, also Hugh de Puiset, had been chancellor to Lewis VII.¹ Hugh had had now a longer tenure of power than any man of his mark in Europe. At an early age he had been made treasurer of York, in which capacity he had styled himself Hugh, "by the grace of God, treasurer and archdeacon"; had fought the battles in court, council and chapter, of his cousin S. William, and had headed the garrisons and trained the soldiers of Henry of Winchester when Henry II. was yet a child.² He had every opportunity and many qualifications for becoming a very great man, and in spite of his failures, he left a mark upon the north of England which is not yet effaced. He was a man of grand stature, and singularly noble face,³ eloquent, energetic, a mighty

Adelaide may have been the mother, as she certainly was of his son Henry. This Henry gave Stockdale to Sallay Abbey "pro salute animæ meæ et Adelidis de Perci matris meæ et Dionysiæ sponsæ meæ . . . Sicut in cartis Ricardi de Morevill et Willelmi de Perci continentur." Mon. Angl. v. 510. Adelidis de Percy had another son named Alan de Morvill, who confirmed a donation which Adelidis de Percy his mother had made to Henry de Puiset his brother, of all the land of Settle and the church of Giggleswick. Whitaker, History of Craven, p. 111. She probably had married a Morvill after Hugh became a bishop. Henry de Puiset's wife Dionysia was a daughter of Odo de Thilli, of the family to which Randulf de Thilli, archbishop Roger's constable belonged. Madox, Hist. Exch., p. 356, from Pipe Roll of 31 Hen. II. It is clear that the connexion of the Puisets and Percys was very close, and that the former had gained a strong position in Yorkshire. Henry de Puiset was a great benefactor of Finchale priory.

¹ See Ben. Pet. i. 241, W. Newb., v. 11. He is to be distinguished from Hugh the count of Bar on the Seine, the bishop's nephew, who comes more into English history and was buried in the Galilee at Durham, Ben. Pet. ii. 92. The bishop's son, who was chancellor in 1180, died before 1185. He was the youngest of the family.

hunter,¹ a great shipmaster,² a magnificent builder, an able defender and besieger, a consummate intriguer, and a very wary politician³. Against great odds he had retained his position through all the struggles of Henry's reign. Of the Becket quarrel he kept himself comparatively clear, sympathizing, doubtless, as his uncle of Winchester and his cousin of Sens did, with the ecclesiastical principles of the martyr, but unwilling to risk anything by taking a decided part against the king. The death of the bishop of Winchester in 1171, and his own close connexion with the French court, induced him in 1173 to take a more hazardous part, and although not actually to rebel, to attempt the position of mediator which had been held by his uncle in the contest between Stephen and Matilda, but which Matilda's son was little likely to regard as loyal. His temporizing policy on this occasion drew down on him the severe animadversion of Henry,⁴ but he was not like Arnulf of Lisieux, a prelate who could be driven into resignation. Henry is right he must have been trained early to the use of arms, as he was early preferred in the church. But he was probably older.

⁴ Ben. Pet. i. 64, 67. His policy is, I think, quite that of the Champagne counts and bishops; resistance to the royal authority on ecclesiastical grounds, in all other matters thoroughly secular. Hugh is always found on the clerical side, although he had very little that was clerical about him; and so helped to thwart archbishop Geoffrey, and was always on the best terms with the popes. Without being a great man, he was always in a great position, and seldom unequal to the occasion. His biography, if it could be written in detail, would be a diplomatic or political history of at least 50 eventful years of English national life.

doubtless saw that his own policy was to make it the bishop's interest to be faithful, and not to risk on the side of Scotland the substitution of a weaker, even if more trustworthy, champion. By every turn of affairs, then, he had gained power, and could he have realized the authority apparently entrusted to him by Richard, he would have exercised during the remaining years of his life a rule more exactly resembling that of the great ecclesiastical princes of Germany than anything that has ever existed in England. We picture him as like one of those grand stern figures that look down in stone from the walls and piers of the cathedrals of Mentz, Würzburg, and Bamberg. He was very ambitious, not more than commonly unprincipled or unscrupulous, and with the exception of the shortsightedness inseparable from a narrow personal selfishness, an able, as he was a very experienced, man. He seems to have possessed strong affections, and, notwithstanding their constant ill usage of him, to have been personally a friend of both Henry¹ and his sons. His charm of manner and good nature, perhaps, did as much for the permanence of his power as did the versatility of his policy.

Such was the first enemy, for he was an enemy by the very necessity of the case, whom William Longchamp had to encounter; a man whose position, character, and history stood in the most marked contrast with his own. William Longchamp was a novus homo. Without crediting the ill-natured statement of Hugh of Nunant²

Contrast of Hugh de Puiset with William Longchamp.

See Hoveden iii. 239. Coldingham mentions that Richard used to call him his father, p. 14; and both he and John always recognized the near relationship. John even carried it on to the next generation, calling Henry de Puiset his cousin. Rot. Cart. (ed. Hardy), p. 126.

and Giraldus¹ that his grandfather was a run-away serf who had escaped from the Beauvaisis into Normandy, it may be considered as certain that that grandfather was the founder of the family. William was a son of Hugh de Longchamp,² who, so far as we can see, was the person to whom, early in the reign of Henry II., lands in Herefordshire had been given by the King;³ who held in the same county a knight's fee under the house of Lacy,⁴ and in Normandy the office of fermer of the Honour of Conches.⁵ He took his name from the ducal demesne and castle of Longchamp, one of the four castles in the forest of Lions, in which he occupied a small holding. He seems to have married a Lacy,⁶ and perhaps was one of those knights who made their fortunes in the service of the younger Henry. In the year 1180 he was in disgrace, being greatly in debt to the exchequer of the duchy, and having failed to present himself before the justiciar when he was summoned. His balance of account unpaid for the Honour of Conches was upwards of 700*l.*, and he owed besides for purprestures in the forest, for the rents of the carpenters of Longchamp, and an amercement of 100*l.* for non-appear-once and waste.¹ That his difficulties were the result of political misconduct appears from the statement of Giraldus, that the chancellor had been spoken of by Henry II. as a traitor on both father's and mother's side.² The date of his appointment to Conches would tally very nearly with the period of the younger Henry's ascendancy in Normandy. That he was a man of mark may be inferred from the fact that Ralph Tesson, Reginald of Pavilly, and Richard Vernon, three of the great barons of Normandy, were amongst the sureties for the payment of his debt, a fourth being his son Hugh de Longchamp the younger.³ To this Hugh the estate of Wilton in Herefordshire is stated to have been given by his father,⁴ although the person whom we first find administering it was named Henry. The elder Hugh must have had a large family; amongst his sons were, besides the chancellor and the second Hugh,⁵ Stephen,

of Long-

At its best the origin of the chancellor was very humble compared with that of the bishop of Durham. His personal qualifications were scarcely less so. That he was the monster of ugliness that Giraldus depicts,⁵ more like an ape than a man, deformed and lame, we may safely set down as an exaggeration; but the utmost that a tolerant critic could say for him was that his person was respectable,⁶ and that it required all the greatness of his mind to compensate for the shortness of his body. And the careers of the two statesmen were in strong contrast; whilst Hugh de Puiset had heir. Anyhow Geoffrey was one of the family, for Osbert Longchamp is his pledge. Madox, Hist. Exch., 356. See more of Geoffrey below, p. cii. note.

¹ Stephen Longchamp had Frome Herbert in Herefordshire of the gift of Walter de Lacy, and Mutford in Suffolk in right of his wife Petronilla, daughter of Osbert de Cailly, and Hildeburga, lady of Baudemont. This connexion accounts for the mention of him in the treaty between Philip and Richard in 1195; and for his relations with Henry de Vere. See below p. lxxv. Stapleton, Rolls, &c. II. cxi. &c. Rot. been plotting and warring, William had been working as a clerk in the chancery, first under Geoffrey, who had made him his official in the archdeaconry of Rouen¹, then under Richard, who had made him his confidant and chaplain before he came to the crown.² His rise from such a post to that of chancellor, justiciar, and legate was very sudden, and shows that he possessed in an extreme degree the confidence of his master as well as great ambition and confidence in himself. The horrid accusations of immorality brought against him by Giraldus³ defeat themselves; they are the utterance of a spiteful and defeated antagonist, one, moreover, whose words on a question of personal interest are never worthy of consideration. All that we really gather from his description is, that William was a plain, short, lame man, who did not understand English, and who was very imprudent in showing his dislike to the nation that he had to govern.⁴ Against the charges of immorality, so easy to bring and so hard to repel, which both his chief assailants allege against him, we must set the panegyrics of the

and it is at all events important, as showing that although the leading men in England were still all of Norman blood, it was beginning to be regarded as an unwise thing to despise the English. He is arguing so as to excite odium amongst a people who felt themselves English :—"Anglos autem cum tota curia sua tanto et tam exorabili est odio persecutus, ut usuali verbo in eorum opprobrium et improprium dicere consueverint; 'Anglicus flam, si hoc fecero. Pejor sum Anglico si illud admisero.' Ad injuriam quoque cumulam, et dedecoris argumentum cum ad exquisita naturæ pergere parabant, dicere solebant 'Eamus facere Angli-cum.'" V. Galfr., p. 407.

monks of Canterbury who dared not have taken as their patron a bishop of notoriously evil life;¹ of Peter of Blois, who had nothing in common with the monks,² but was a sincerely pious man; and of Nigel Wireker, of whose sincerity and desire of reform there can be no doubt, and who actually dedicated to him his satire on the manners of the age.³ It is, however, simply impossible that such a man as Giraldus describes should have been tolerated in an age and country in which S. Hugh, of Lincoln, was religiously all powerful. S. Hugh does not seem to have liked the chancellor's policy; their political principles were opposed, and the Saint took part in the proceedings against Longchamp in defence of Archbishop Geoffrey; but their personal relations were not unkind, and the chancellor seems to have trusted implicitly to the bishop's good will.⁴ The man who would not tolerate the dead bones of Fair Rosamond within the choir of Godstow, would not have hesitated to denounce a profligate in the sacred offices of legate and bishop.⁵ Setting aside, then, these calumnies, his character seems to have been this:—He was a strong-minded, ambitious, self-confident, resolute man; faithful to his master, ready and active in his service; unsparing of labour, energetic, and unwearied; relentless in exactions and oppressions where his master's interests could be advanced by such means; fearless to rashness in his undertakings; greedy of advancement for his family; intolerant of opposition or equality; devoid of tact in dealing with his peers and of sympathy with his inferiors; probably, as appears from the general tone of his history as told by neutrals as well as by enemies, elated by the greatness of his position beyond the ordinary exaltation of the upstart. He was thus a man whose nobler as well as meaner qualities would lay him open to attack from the king's enemies and his own competitors for power.

William Longchamp had been consecrated to the see of Ely on the last day of 1189 and enthroned with great pomp on the feast of the Epiphany 1190.¹ Before the end of February,² having quarrelled with the co-justiciar, he joined the king in Normandy, where he stayed till Easter, and immediately after the festival returned to England with full powers; the Bishop of Durham remaining behind to secure his grant of the justiciarship of the north, and the Bishop of Winchester to obtain the restitution of his purchased honours.³ The first event of the chancellor's government was untoward. The Jews of York, alarmed by the riot which had taken place at London on the occasion of the coronation, and was followed by similar outbreaks at Norwich in February, at Stamford in March, at Bury St. Edmund's on Palm Sunday, and at almost every large town except Winchester,⁴ had obtained, in expectation of a general rising, permission from John Marshall, the sheriff of Yorkshire, to occupy a tower in the castle of York. over, the sheriff ordered the Jews to quit the tower, and on their demurring, called out the force of the county against them. The knights of Yorkshire besieged the castle, and the Jews, on the Friday before Palm Sunday, slew their wives and children; shut themselves up in the tower, set it on fire, and perished in it. The citizens and knights thereupon seized the Jews' houses in York and burned them, destroying with them the bonds by which the debts due to them were secured, and on which the whole banking business of the north depended.¹ The leaders of the knights in this exploit were Philip of Falconberge, Richard Malebysse, William Percy, and Marmaduke Darrell.²

whether justly or not the punishment fell most heavily on the adherents of the Percies, the relations and allies of the bishop of Durham. The lands of William Percy and Richard Malebyse, his kinsman,¹ with those of their squires, were seized to the King's use: the entire property of the fugitives was also confiscated, and the money due to the Jews was collected where it could be by the king's officers. On the same occasion the cathedral was put under interdict and the clergy suspended, because they declined to receive Longchamp as legate, although he had not yet received his commission.² It was clear to the bishop of Durham and his friends, both in the county and in the chapter, that the chancellor had jumped at an opportunity of infringing his jurisdiction as justiciar, and that his sense of right had been

On the other hand, the Fauconbergs and Cukeneys were closely connected and were fellow benefactors of Welbeck; Mon. Angl. vi. 873. Marmaduke Darrell also attests a charter of William Percy; Mon. Angl. vi. 1190. I should not like to accuse the Puiset and Percy connexion of a deliberate attempt to get rid of the evidence of their debts on this occasion, but so it may have been. These details are not unimportant, if we consider Roger Hoveden's own relation to Hugh de Puiset, and that many of these charters are attested by William of Hoveden.

Interview of the bishops of Durham and Ely, ending in the arrest of the former.

As soon as the examination was over, William Longchamp set out towards Lincoln, where he had a like work to do; but he had only reached Blythe,¹ in Nottinghamshire, when he met Bishop Hugh bearing his commission, and hastening to secure himself in the territory in which he was now scarcely less than sovereign. Hugh was not without suspicion of the chancellor's double dealing, for in passing through London he had presented himself to the barons of the exchequer and suffered a rebuff at their hands.² Now he delivered his credentials. Longchamp professed himself most happy to obey the directions of the king: Hugh talked largely of his new powers: the chancellor was more reserved. At last the commission was read and proved to be less formidable than he expected.³ He agreed to meet the bishop a week later at Tickhill.⁴ On the appointed day he received him alone in the castle there, and, to the bishop's disgust, produced a commission to himself dated some days later than his rival's. Hugh felt that he had been shamefully treated, but he had no chance of retreating. The chancellor arrested him, and swore by the life of Richard that until the old bishop surrendered everything that he had purchased of the king,—castles, justiciarship, earldom, and sheriffdom, he should remain a prisoner.⁵ In vain he protested; he was taken back to London and there compelled to surrender all and to give up, moreover, his son Henry and another knight, Gilbert de la Leya,⁶ as hostages for his good behaviour. This done, he was allowed to return northwards; but when he reached his manor of Howden he was stopped by the sheriff Osbert and William Stuteville,¹ and obliged to give security for residing there during the chancellor's pleasure. He forwarded his complaints immediately to the king, who was now at Marseilles. Richard, thinking, perhaps, that his minister had been too zealous, and that it was hard treatment for so old and dignified a man, wrote to Longchamp ordering him to restore the manor of Sadberge and the castle of Newcastle-on-Tyne.² But Hugh was kept still at Howden. The fruits of victory remained with the chancellor. He had effectually rid himself of his chief competitor: and in this matter his appointed counsellors in the exchequer were at one with him. He saw himself at the summit of his ambition: and he now received the legatine commission from Clement III., which made him supreme in church and state; a letter of Richard, from Bayonne, dated the 6th of June, which was perhaps the document which had confounded Hugh de Puiset, gave him full power to act in all things as the king's lieutenant.³

He is kept under bond at Howden.

The barons of the exchequer connive at Longchamp's treatment of him.

The measures which he next took were dictated partly by the king and partly by his own instinct of self-defence. His brother Stephen accompanied the king; but Osbert and Henry remained with him: to Osbert he entrusted the sheriffdoms of Yorkshire and Westmoreland—he had already received from the king the keeping of the palace of Westminster and the prison of London.⁴ He himself undertook the fortifying of the Tower, which he entrusted to one of his dependents, William

He traversed the country with a large retinue, levying contributions from the barons as justiciar, and as legate exacting procurations from the clergy. He was attended by a court of clerks and knights, the latter anxious to connect themselves with so successful a man by marriages with his kinsfolk, and the former singing his praises as a liberal and magnificent patron.³ It was probably at this time that he secured for the son of Henry Longchamp the heiress of the great family of Croun:⁴ he placed in his brother's hands also Stephen Beauchamp, whose wardship he had purchased from Bertram de Verdun: for another brother, Robert, he intrigued that the monks of Westminster might choose him as their abbot.⁵ He made use of his position also to strengthen himself in the good graces of his colleagues. By a transaction which seems scarcely less than fraudulent, he allowed Geoffrey FitzPeter to be received as heir, in right of his wife, of William Mandeville, Earl of Essex.⁶ He formed a strict alliance with the earl of Arundel, to whom, for 2,000 marks, he restored the honour of his earldom, which had been for sixteen years retained in hand by the crown;¹ and with William de Braiose² and others who had the power to serve and defend his family on the Welsh border, where the family estates lay.

The country was at peace, and only troubled with those heavy exactions, which, as being a part of Richard's necessary policy under all his ministries, cannot be ascribed to the influence of the chancellor, although they tended doubtless to make him unpopular. Complaints from the co-justiciars that their advice was systematically neglected are said to have been conveyed to the king; but they continued to act with him, and Richard gave no sign of believing them, or of a design to modify his minister's commission to please men whom he less trusted. Longchamp found time to hold solemn meetings of the clergy. On the 1st of August he held a council at Gloucester, the object of which may not have been entirely ecclesiastical, as Richard of Devizes ascribes his presence there to a wish to besiege the castle.³ It is not clear, however, who could be holding the castle against him. Here the bishop of Winchester met him, and received back his patrimony, but not the purchased sheriffdom. The reconciliation seemed to be perfect. Longchamp took the bishop's advice in not pressing for entrance into the castle. This is the first sign of difficulties to come. On October 13, he held a legatine assembly at Westminster,¹ in which the bishop of London sat on his right hand and the bishop of Winchester on his left. In November, on the 18th, he visited Canterbury and was entertained with great honour by the monks of Christ Church.² Little is known of the business transacted on these occasions. Gervase, the Canterbury Chronicler, preserves an account of a discussion relative to the consecration of the bishop-elect of Worcester, and Richard of Devizes mentions the quarrels of the bishop and monks of Coventry as a topic at Westminster; but there is no trace of any important act of constitutional policy during this time; and the sole political move which is mentioned, is the negotiation with the King of Scots, carried on, doubtless, with Richard's sanction, for the recognition of Arthur of Brittany, as heir in case of the king's dying childless.³ The charters of towns granted so freely by Richard at a later period, which form the mark of his reign on domestic history, are scarce under this administration;⁴ and although the chancellor acted as judge in the courts both in London and in the country, there is no trace of any improvement introduced by him, such as had distinguished year after year the rule of his predecessor.

The few notices we have of his acts during this period show that he was in constant progress, and confirm the statements of the historians as to the burden of entertaining him. A visit of a single night cost the house which received him three years' savings.⁵ He entertained a train of a thousand horsemen.⁶ He moved through the kingdom, Richard of Devizes says, like a flash of lightning.¹ Unhappily, the collection of revenue to satisfy the ever-increasing demands of Richard seems to have been his principal occupation. His occupations.

So the year 1190 ends. Early in 1191 we find him at Northampton witnessing, with the other judges of the Curia, a final concord between the abbot of Peterborough and one Roger de Torpel, relative to the advowson of the church of Maxey.² This seems to have been about the last peaceful transaction in which he was engaged.

His misfortunes came upon him all at once. Complaints had been carried to Richard, who was now at Messina, in unbroken succession, and he had refused to listen; now the queen-mother herself undertook the task of remonstrance. She started on her journey to Sicily in February;³ one part of her errand was to forward the consecration of the archbishop of York. The same month brought from Messina the news of the death of the archbishop of Canterbury.⁴ Complaints forwarded to Richard. As soon as the two metropolitan sees should be filled up, the legatine power would almost to a certainty be withdrawn from the bishop of Ely, and with it a large part of the influence which made him for the time invulnerable. Vacancy of the see of Canterbury.

But Eleanor's journey to Messina seems to have had another more speedy and more fatal consequence. Unfortunately the want of exact dates prevents us from ascertaining the period of John's return to England; but if it was before February 1191, his mother's influence, whilst she was within reach, must have kept him within bounds. As soon as she departs, we find him in active mischief. Eleanor's visit to Sicily. John begins to move.

tasted the sweets of power.

John was not inclined to wait for his succession; the foolish policy of Richard in attempting to conciliate by the gift of real power, an enemy whom he knew to be faithless and whose weakness of character he despised too much for his own safety, had given John a taste, too tempting by far, of substantial sovereignty. After he had returned to England he set up his own court in the castles which had been given him, with scarcely less than royal pretension. He had his own justiciar, Roger de Plasnes,¹ lord of Eastthorpe and Birch in Essex; his chancellor, Stephen Ridell,² afterwards archdeacon of Ely and always a thorn in Longchamp's side; a member of one of the great ministerial houses of Henry I.'s reign, nephew to the archdevil of Canterbury; his seal bearer was Master Benedict,³ probably the same who became in after years bishop of Rochester; William of Kahannes was his seneschal;⁴ Theobald Walter his butler.⁵ With these ministers he taxed and judged the tenants of his estates and the inhabitants of his franchises. The counties under his control were administered by his own sheriffs, and their revenues were a loss to the exchequer of the king. Extravagant as he was, he was rich enough to dispense with the oppressive measures taken by the chancellor; his magnificence made him popular, and his court became the headquarters of all who had grounds of complaint against Longchamp. He lived at Lancaster, where Theobald Walter was his castellan, or at Marlborough, and waited for a chance of supplanting the minister. The leading man in his counsels was Hugh of Nunant, bishop of Coventry, who, much as he hated Longchamp, had not yet quarrelled with him. John himself, until the outbreak, seems to have been on good terms with him, and it was from him as legate that he had received absolution from his vow of absence from England for three years.¹

Hugh of Nunant was sprung from a family the head of which held the barony of Totness by gift of King William Rufus. He was sister's son and adopted child of Arnulf of Lisieux,² the pertinacious schemer of Henry II.'s reign, and had inherited from him the diplomatic abilities of his race. He had travelled and negotiated, and under Henry II. had been ambassador to Frederick I. and Alexander III.³ He had tried his hand also at the work of a legate; had been sent in that capacity to Ireland for John's coronation, in 1187;⁴ and on his way had insulted the church of Canterbury by carrying a cross and wearing a mitre whilst yet unconsecrated, in the presence of Archbishop Baldwin. Since his consecration, on the other hand, his aim had been to play the part of a temporal lord; he had bought, as we have seen, the sheriffdoms in three counties. He was possessed with an extreme hatred of monachism, which was amply repaid by the monks. He was a thoroughly unprincipled man; very vain and ambitious; clever, eloquent, and adroit, but jealous of all pre-eminence and unscrupulous in word and deed. Gervase of Canterbury, with some discrimination, represents him as an able and spirited man of business; captious in word;

ready to curse where a curse would frighten; apt enough with soft words where the object was to subvert the strong.¹ I have already referred to him as the author of the vile charges brought by Giraldus against Longchamp. If the monks might be believed, his own character was no better. It was said that when lying on his death-bed he recounted the sins of his life, he found no confessor who would venture to appoint him a penance.² Giraldus³ adduces this as a proof of the greatness of his penitence; but the story proceeds to say that he sentenced himself to purgatory until the day of judgment. It was he who advised Richard to send the monks to the devil; devils was the best name he ever found for the fraternity; and the great object of his episcopal policy was to substitute for them canons, not only at Coventry but in the other conventual cathedrals.

The whole details of his contest with his own monks, which was as long and lively as that of the archbishop with those of Christchurch, are not preserved; but it is not unlikely that part at least of his hatred of Longchamp was caused by the conduct of the latter in this respect. Longchamp was a favourite with the monks and possibly exerted himself on their behalf with a view to the promotion of his brother Robert. Before Baldwin's departure, in a council at Westminster on the 22nd of October 1189,⁴ Hugh had shown himself to the bishops black and blue with the blows the monks had given him; and Baldwin, whose feelings were easily excited, and who had no love of monks who were not Cistercians, had joined in a sentence of excommunication against the assailants. The chancellor had so far yielded to the same pressure as to order, in the council at Westminster in October 1190¹, the removal of the monks; but it is probable that he hesitated to sanction the oppressive means by which the change was carried out, or that when the see of Canterbury became vacant, he adopted the more promising policy. Whether Hugh had kept terms with him until he gained his object, or had quarrelled with him on the subject, does not appear; but now the close friendship which the world had seen between the two bishops, broke up suddenly,² and Hugh of Nunant became the intimate friend of John.

Subsequent events showed the line of argument by which John's fears and mistrust of the chancellor were aroused. Richard whilst at home had avoided any recognition of John as his heir, and the very liberality with which he had dealt with him was clogged with restrictions that showed his mistrust. The prospect of the succession of Arthur was intolerable; yet it was understood that that was a settled thing between Richard and his minister. The king had in the November just past, arranged for a marriage between Arthur and a daughter of King Tancred, and had written to the pope about Arthur as his heir.³ Possibly the news of this negotiation may have prompted Eleanor's visit to her elder son, and her anxiety for his speedy marriage. She cared little for Arthur, and her love for John probably made her desirous that his state of suspense should be terminated by the birth of a direct heir. In pursuance of the king's plan, Longchamp had negotiated with William the Lion,⁴ who was the nearest kinsman, on the side of his mother, to the young duke. Besides, the vacancy of the see of Canterbury laid open to the legate the highest constitutional position in the realm: if Richard were to die on the crusade, there could be no doubt whose voice would be most potent in the nomination of his successor; there could be no doubt either that the chancellor was tampering with the monks to obtain the election for himself. The bishops as a body were sure to accept the king's nominee, and the king was certain to nominate the chancellor; the monks who alone could impede or delay such a consummation were being prepared to look to him as their protector; he would soon be archbishop; then John's chance of the crown would be gone. Richard's object in nominating the archbishop of Montreal could only be guessed. It might be that he had sold the appointment, or that he had sold the promise; or that he merely wished to waste time, and shut out other competitors. It could be scarcely thought that he intended the nomination to be sustained. In the meantime some blow must be struck that would disgrace or disable Longchamp, nor would it be difficult to find an occasion. He had offended all classes and all parts of England by his exactions, his arrogance, and his contempt for the nation at large. He had rejected the advice of John himself, had virtually imprisoned his fellow justiciar the bishop of Durham; he had shown a provoking disregard of the counsel of the barons whom Richard had associated with him in the regency. There is so much truth unquestionably in these accusations that we cannot be surprised that John acted upon them. And an opportunity soon presented itself.

Longchamp had offended all classes.

Behaviour of Gerard Camville.

The immediate cause of the outbreak was this:— Gerard Camville, son of that Richard who commanded the English fleet on the crusade and was afterwards viceroy of Cyprus, had married Nicolaa of Hay, the heiress of the castellanship of Lincoln, and shortly before the king's departure had bought the sheriffdom of Lincolnshire, with a promise of seven hundred marks. The impolicy of allowing the sheriff's jurisdiction and the possession of the castle to be in the same hands was an admitted principle of administration; even John himself had not been suffered to hold both castles and provincial jurisdictions together: but Gerard Camville's position was not in itself illegal. He had, however, allowed his castle to become a den of robbers, and then, to avoid judicial inquiries, had done homage to John.¹ On hearing of this, the chancellor ordered him to give up both castle and sheriffdom. This he refused to do and prepared for resistance. Nearly at the same time Roger Mortimer, lord of Wigmore, got into difficulties with the government and held his castle against the chancellor's men.²

He does homage to John and defies Longchamp.

It is impossible to say whether the interview which was held between John and Longchamp on Mid-Lent Sunday at Winchester, preceded or followed this outbreak of revolt.³ But it is certain that an estrangement had by this time taken place, and that the two had then and there a serious discussion as to the tenure of certain castles belonging to the honours which John enjoyed, that were yet withheld from him, and as to the pensions settled upon him out of the exchequer. Unless, however, events followed very rapidly, we may place the revolt of Lincoln after this meeting; and it was probably a result of it. If John had not quarrelled with Longchamp, Gerard Camville would not have dared to put himself into his power on the chance of being protected. The interview certainly settled nothing, and John, for once in his life, prompt to action, hastened to the north. Longchamp had to go first to Wigmore; long before he could reach Lincoln the castle was in a state of defence, and worse still, the castles of Tickhill and Nottingham, which had been purposely withheld from John, had been surprised by him.¹ John de Lacy, the constable of Chester, who had undertaken to hold them for the chancellor, had entrusted them to Robert of Croxton, and Eudo Deiville, and had gone to the crusade, during which he died at Tyre.² Roger, his son, had placed two other knights as companions of these two, and all four had turned traitors. John won the first move of the game, and when Longchamp arrived in Lincolnshire, after taking Wigmore and sentencing Roger Mortimer to three years of exile,³ he found his forces weary and an attack impossible. At the same time two other pieces of news reached him.⁴ Clement III. was dead, and his legation would require the confirmation of the new pope; and Walter of Coutances, archbishop of Rouen, the trusted minister of Henry II., who had accompanied Richard to Messina, was returning to England with unknown instructions. A proposal for pacification was only too welcome: the legate returned to Winchester, and there, on the 25th of April, an agreement was drawn up for an arbitration.

Arbitration
at Winchester (April

The management of this was entrusted to three bishops, Winchester, London, and Bath. The bishops summoned three barons to represent each side: for the chancellor, the earls of Warren, Arundel, and Clare; for John, his chancellor, Stephen Ridell, William of Wenneval and Reginald of Wasseville; and in addition to these, each party chose eight other knights. The choice of the three earls,—old Hamelin of Warren, the brother of Henry II.; William of Albini, son of Queen Adeliza, and his stepson Richard of Clare, shows that the chancellor's position still recommended itself to those who might be supposed to have the king's interest most at heart. They had been among the most faithful friends of Henry II.; John's representatives, on the contrary, were three of his own creatures. Both parties swore to act fairly, and the arbitration was pronounced, as follows:—Gerard Camville is reconciled with the chancellor and allowed to retain the castle of Lincoln. John is formally to restore the castles of Tickhill and Nottingham, but the chancellor is to entrust the command of them to Reginald of Wasseville, and William of Wenneval, liegemen of the king but partizans of John; each of whom is to give security for the surrender of them to the king, if he shall return; if not, to John. As for the other castles belonging to the honours of John, the chancellor is to change the wardens if John can show due cause for such a measure. In case of the king's death the chancellor is to do his best to secure the succession for John. All the articles, it will be seen, are decided in favour of John,—a proof either that his cause was regarded as superior, or that the chancellor's fortunes were sinking in the estimation of his friends; for the two main points of his policy, so far as we can discover, were the maintenance of the king's hold on the castles and of the succession of Arthur.¹ Two days after the pacification, the archbishop of Rouen landed at Shoreham, furnished with a batch of instructions from the king.²

somewhat wanting in resolution, and scarcely strong enough to be entrusted with the almost unlimited discretion with which Richard accredited him. He left Messina with Queen Eleanor on the 2nd of April,¹ glad to escape by the sacrifice of his treasure, the further perils of the crusade. Richard, in a characteristic way, although in the utmost need of his services, made him pay heavily for the relaxation of his vow.² But hastily as he had made his way home, his commissions were dated as far back as the 23rd of February.³ It would seem that the king had not been able to make up his mind to discard the chancellor until the arrival of Eleanor; and that even when, in consequence we may suppose of her representations, he at last confided the instructions to the archbishop, it must have been with a verbal command to use them as the occasion might seem to warrant. Unless there were some such private direction the conduct of the archbishop is inexplicable. He was far too honest a man to conceal an order given peremptorily by the king; unquestionably his mission was in the first place to investigate, although after investigation he had full power to act. It must, however, be considered that Richard's conduct was puzzling to all parties; at the very moment he was entrusting the widest powers to the archbishop, he was writing to urge John and others to act in unison with the chancellor.⁴ On his arrival he found that John had gained a decided advantage over the chancellor, and that to produce the letters which superseded the latter would be to throw all power into the hands of the man whom his master most reasonably distrusted.¹ He saw also, it seems likely, that the humiliation which Longchamp had gone through would be enough to cut him off from the hope of the primacy, and his legation had already expired. John was at the moment the most dangerous of the two, and Longchamp's authority must be sustained.

Probable reason for his not acting.

The chancellor, on the other hand, finding that the archbishop produced no new instructions, and that the mercenary force which he had introduced into the country was daily increasing,² took heart and prepared for another struggle. Before attempting this, however, he had to visit Canterbury, where the bishop-elect of Worcester was waiting for consecration. There on the 5th of May he met the bishops of Winchester, Bath, Chichester, and Rochester,³ and his great enemy Hugh of Nunant; and by these the consecration was performed. On the following day the legate, for so he still called himself, presented to the monks of Christ Church the king's letters, recommending them to elect the archbishop of Montreal.⁴ The monks expressed surprise at the urgency of the

¹ The letters subsequently produced by the archbishop are given in part or entire by R. Diceto and Giraldus Cambrensis. Of these, one is a fragment of a letter addressed to William Marshall, Hugh Bardulf, Geoffrey Fitz Peter and William Briwere; placing in their hands the supreme power, in case the chancellor shall have not acted faithfully; it is not dated and contains no mention of the archbishop. R. Diceto, 659. A second, also given by R. Diceto, is dated Feb. 28 at Messina addressed to the chancellor and the four barons above-mentioned, associating the archbishop in the government of the kingdom, and speaking of an especial commission given to him relative to the see of Canterbury. A third, dated Feb. 20, and addressed to William Marshall alone, contains words nearly identical with those of R. Diceto's first fragment, but directing that in case of the chancellor's unfaithfulness, the justices are to act "secundum prædicti archiepiscopi dispositionem." Richard of Devizes mentions other instructions, no doubt addressed to the convent of Canterbury; and one in particular giving Longchamp leave to manage by himself the election to the abbacy of Westminster. legate's behaviour, and asked leave to present their answer to the council of bishops which was to sit a few days later at Northampton. The permission was granted by Longchamp readily enough, for although he might have preferred the election of a stranger to the translation of any of his brethren, he was better pleased that the archbishopric should be vacant still. It is to be suspected that on this occasion there was some underhand dealing between Longchamp and the monks, for immediately on the departure of the legate,¹ they displaced their prior, Osbert, whom Baldwin had appointed against their will, an act for which they were never called to order by Longchamp: from this moment also the idea recovered ground that he himself intended to be the new archbishop. The report reached John, who wrote urgently against him to the convent,² and the archbishop of Rouen allowed so much of his instructions to transpire, that it was known that one part of them at least was to settle the business of the election.

The meeting at Northampton followed shortly,³ and a further postponement of the election. The monks required further evidence of Baldwin's death and of the qualifications of the aspirant. The justices urged that the election should be proceeded with instantly, but the monks as usual contrived to gain their point, this time probably with the direct support of the chancellor.

Shortly after this arrangement was made, the hostilities between the chancellor and Gerard Camville were resumed. Immediately after Midsummer,⁴ having taken measures to secure his reappointment as legate, one of which was the forwarding of urgent letters in his favour from the bishops and from Walter of Coutances amongst them,¹ he brought together his forces and again advanced on Lincoln, this time taking permanent possession of the sheriffdom, which he handed over to William Stuteville.² The castle, however, still held out, and on the first report of the chancellor's march, the garrisons of Tickhill and Nottingham, as might be expected, opened their gates to John. But again both parties avoided a battle, although Longchamp had called up a third of the feudal levy of England for his defence.³ The moderate counsels of the archbishop of Rouen prevailed, and at another conference at Winchester on the 28th of July, a somewhat fairer arbitration was arranged.⁴ In this the bishop of Durham also took part, having, it would seem, been liberated from his forced inactivity by the arrival of Walter of Coutances; and besides the three who had arbitrated in April, the bishops of Coventry and Chichester were present. Preserving in some measure the lines of the former agreement they decided that John was to place Tickhill in the hands of William of Wenneval,⁵ and Nottingham in those of William Marshall, to be held by them for the king, but in the event of his death or of a further attack on John by the chancellor, to be surrendered to the former. The other castles of John's honours are entrusted to the archbishop of Rouen, the bishop of London, and others, to be surrendered to him in case of the king's death. The castle of Windsor is handed over to the earl of Arundel, Winchester to Gilbert de Lacy,⁶ and Northampton to Simon Pateshull, all partizans of the chancellor. Gerard Camville is to be replaced in the sheriffdom. In all these points the chancellor gave way somewhat more than was wise, but less than he had done in April. When these arrangements should be completed, the complaints of the chancellor against Gerard Camville were to be heard and John was bound not to interfere. Oaths were taken on both sides, for

Among Longchamp's jurors were some who very shortly showed themselves to be his enemies, especially the earl of Salisbury and Roger FitzRainfrai.¹ It is possible that his interests were intentionally betrayed, and it was certainly a puerile piece of lawyer's work to pretend to regard the main question as one between Gerard Camville and the chancellor. But the archbishop of Rouen probably sacrificed other considerations to the maintenance of his own position as mediator, and to the obtaining the omission of any terms which would have openly asserted John's claim to the succession.

Geoffrey, archbishop

Another cloud was rising, not now in the distance. After two years of struggling, the archbishop-elect of York had received permission and an order to be consecrated by the archbishop of Tours.² Immediately on his consecration, urged by John and perhaps not discountenanced by Eleanor,³ he gave out that he was determined to proceed to his see, and that he, as well as John, had been allowed by their brother to withdraw his promise to absent himself for three years from England. The chancellor had received no such instructions; it was his duty to prevent his return, or at least to compel him to swear fealty to the king: as early as July 30,⁴ he had ordered the sheriff of Sussex to arrest him if he should attempt to land within his jurisdiction,⁵ and about the same time had obtained a promise from the countesses of Boulogne and Flanders to forbid his embarkation. Having satisfied himself with these precautions he moved northwards, and having visited probably Ely and St. Edmunds,⁶ he is next found at Norwich.⁷

champ and Hugh of Nunant, a man of whom his contemporaries could deliver contradictory characters. His virtues and faults are clearly the same in the mouths of friends and enemies. His faithfulness to his father when his legitimate children had forsaken him is no recommendation to those who hated his father, but it is not less a virtue. His skill in arms, his energy, his high and generous spirit, are apparent even when adduced as an argument of his unfitness for high spiritual office. His secular ambition calls for the animadversions both of his rivals and of those who would condemn such a feeling in an ecclesiastic altogether, neither choosing to remember that his ecclesiastical character was forced upon him. He had been for many years the close companion of his father as chancellor, and it was Henry's last expressed wish that he should be archbishop of York; probably he saw that in such a character only would his life be safe against his brothers, or any share of the power which he had enjoyed so long, remain to him. His own ambition, Giraldus tells us, pointed¹ another way; to his chance of surviving his childless brothers and becoming king of England. The idea is so strange that we might almost suspect that Giraldus did not invent it. Such a thought, however, explains in some measure the conduct of both Geoffrey and Richard. The king was anxious to have him ordained, as the tonsure would be a bar to the crown; Geoffrey held back from ordination himself, as he had done before when elected to the see of Lincoln; nor did he receive consecration until he had seen both Richard and John married. But on Giraldus's word alone it cannot be taken for truth, and there were plenty of people whose interests were concerned in hindering his acquisition of the full rights of his position. Hugh de Puiset had no wish to be placed under an ecclesiastical superior from whom, although he had by papal privilege obtained the right of refusing him formal submission,¹ he might look for constant canonical as well as constitutional interference. Richard was anxious, for a long time at least, to keep Geoffrey out of England, and to retain in the hands of the exchequer the great revenues of the see of York. The chapter of York was filled with turbulent and secular men, a large proportion of whom Geoffrey had offended immediately after his election by refusing to confirm their titles. These were in constant strife with him before and after his consecration, and during the whole of his pontificate, misinterpreting and perverting every action of his, and catching at every chance which his undeniable talent for quarrelling with every one gave them, of attempting his deposition. John could have nothing in common with Geoffrey, although he anxiously pressed upon him his duty of taking charge of his church, with the intention no doubt of preparing fresh difficulties for the chancellor. William Longchamp seems to have been fully persuaded that the king had made no concession in respect of the oath, and that he was perfectly justified in forbidding his return. He might, however, have seen that Geoffrey, if he could make him a friend, would be a counterpoise to John in the north of England.

enemies and rivals for power.

It was probably the news brought from England by Eleanor that induced Richard to stir at last in the matter; he saw, perhaps, that Geoffrey might be harmless, or even useful in the case of a struggle between the bishops of Durham and Ely. Eleanor, on her visit to Rome, laid the circumstances before pope Celestine;² all difficulties were obviated; the letters of Clement III., by which Hugh de Puiset was authorized to refuse the profession of obedience, were set aside; and the archbishop of Tours, Bartholomew of Vendôme, under whose eye Geoffrey had studied in the schools,¹ was ordered to consecrate him. This was done on the 18th of August; the same day he received the pall, and immediately set out for England. On his arrival at Guisnes² he learned that the countess of Flanders had forbidden her men to convey him across the straits, and that the countess of Boulogne had done the same at Whitsand. On remonstrating, however, he was told that the prohibition extended only to him personally, that the Whitsand boatmen would carry his equipage, and that he might cross in an English vessel. The hint was taken; the retinue, under Simon of Apulia, crossed in Flemish vessels on Friday the 13th of September;³ Geoffrey followed in an English boat and reached Dover on the following day about nine in the morning. The authorities were prepared for him; before he had time to land, the messengers of the lady of the castle, Richenda, the chancellor's sister, boarded the vessel, and insisted on his proceeding straight to the castle, where the day before his baggage had been deposited. Geoffrey declined the invitation, hastily disguised himself,¹ and mounting the horse which was prepared for him on the beach, started at full speed for the priory of S. Martin. One of Richenda's men rode after him, and caught the horse by the bridle; but Geoffrey was equal to the occasion, struck out with his right leg, and hit his adversary's horse full on the side with his armed heel. The horse plunged, and compelled the rider to relax his hold.² The archbishop, after this exploit, proceeded unmolested to the priory, where he found the canons beginning mass; the epistle was being read: the words (so the story went) in the reader's mouth were, "He that troubleth you shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be," and "I would they were even cut off that trouble you."³ The soldiers who followed did not venture to lay hands on him, but took possession of the monastery. When the mass was over, the archbishop sent to ask Richenda whether the outrage were authorized by her. She replied that she had the chancellor's order, and that if he bade her to burn both Dover Castle and London town,⁴ she would obey. The knights of Kent, under William Auberville, son-in-law of Ranulf Glanvill, entreated the archbishop to take the oath of fealty to the king and chancellor at once. Geoffrey, with his usual impetuosity, replied that to the king he had already sworn fealty, and would not do it again upon compulsion; as for the chancellor, he would do nothing for him but what should be done for a traitor. The state of siege continued for four days; on the Sunday,

Geoffrey excommunicated Richenda;¹ thereupon the soldiers took possession of the church. By the evening Matthew de Cleres, the constable, arrived in person, a little shocked by his wife's zeal, but his entreaties failed to persuade Geoffrey to take the oath. At last, on the Wednesday, he was arrested by a band of mercenary soldiers, under Aubrey Marney, an Essex knight, and Alexander Puintel, a hanger-on of the chancellor.²

He is taken from S. Martin's to the castle.

He was dragged from the altar, where he had been assisting at mass, and brought on foot, for he refused to mount a horse, carrying his archiepiscopal cross, to the castle.

Public excitement at the news.

The news of the outrage spread like wild-fire; the few parallels which presented themselves with the sufferings of S. Thomas invested Geoffrey for the time with the character of a church champion.³ S. Hugh of Lincoln, who was at Oxford, excommunicated with lighted candles⁴ the castellan and his wife, with all their aiders and abettors.

The bishops remonstrate with Longchamp.

The bishop of London hastened to Norwich to remonstrate with the chancellor:⁵ the bishop of Norwich, that old John of Oxford, who had known so long the dangerous waters on which Longchamp was launching, forgot his failing health,⁶ and urged the immediate liberation of the archbishop in very brisk argument. The prior and convent of Canterbury, on whose goodwill he had so much reason to depend, wrote more in sorrow than in anger.⁷ In vain the chancellor cursed the zeal of his friends and the fickleness of his master.⁸ He lamented the outrage. He had given no such orders; he had simply directed that the archbishop should take the oath of fealty to the king, which he had not yet done since his consecration, and that if he refused he should be sent, bag and baggage, to Whitsand. In vain he showed the letters-patent in which Geoffrey had promised to stay away for three years.¹ His blunder was more fatal to him than his crimes. His enemies had at last secured a charge which would unite all classes against him; or, for all classes were already against him, would give them a common excuse for action.

The charge against him taken up by all his rivals.

Hugh of Nunant drew together the strings of the plot.² As soon as the arrest was known he hastened to John at Lancaster, and pointed out to him the greatness of the opportunity. Together they came immediately to Marlborough,³ whither John invited the chief men on whom he could depend, either as personally attached to himself, or as likely, for the sake of keeping order in the country, to take part against the chancellor. Longchamp, in compliance with the remonstrances of his friends, sent a hurried order for the archbishop's release.⁴ He was obeyed; Geoffrey was conducted back to S. Martin's after eight days of restraint,⁵ for it had not been an uncourteous captivity, on the 26th of September; he stayed there until the 28th, and then proceeded to London, where the bishop Richard FitzNeal received him with a solemn procession at S. Paul's on Wednesday the second of October.⁶ The chancellor was now assembling his friends and preparing for the first new move that John and his party might take.

a trace of opposition on their part to the oppressions charged against Longchamp; they had joined in his refusal to admit Hugh de Puiset as justiciar;¹ they had not resigned their seats, or stood aloof when he treated them with neglect. Yet they joined immediately in John's proposal for his overthrow.² It was, perhaps, the sight of Hugh de Puiset's unlucky attempt to resist him, that intimidated them, but it is more probable that, although they disliked their chief, and were glad of an opportunity to get rid of him, they could not disown his acts, and perhaps saw nothing enormous about them. William Marshall was a brave soldier, but he had been hand and glove with the younger Henry in his treason,³ and his wisdom had yet twenty years to ripen before he became governor of England and her king. Geoffrey FitzPeter also was an able and moderate minister, whose character was to develop under the discipline of the next reign. Of William Briwere,⁴ we know little that is distinctive, but he was certainly a trusted man of business. Roger FitzRainfray we have seen apparently on the chancellor's side in the quarrel with John.⁵ None of them were yet marked men. Richard had done foolishly in taking away those of their own class who could have led them and kept them together. Just now, if Giraldus is right, they were scattered through the country, preparing perhaps for the Michaelmas audit of the Exchequer. William Marshall was in Gloucestershire, William Briwere in Oxfordshire, Geoffrey FitzPeter in Northamptonshire.⁶ One by one they received John's invitation, and one by one they accepted it. The bishop of Winchester, who had suffered so much from Longchamp, the bishop of Bath, who had hitherto been his friend,¹ who had negotiated for him the business of the legation, followed. They met at Marlborough, and the arrival of the archbishop of Rouen gave a head and authority to their proceedings. The time was clearly come for him to act up to his fullest powers. The chancellor must be sacrificed before John had time to bind to himself, by complicity in revolution, the barons who were now loyal enough to Richard, although they hated, and had just grounds of complaint against, his representative.

The justices, bishops, and barons meet John at Marlborough.

Longchamp could not at first see the difficulty of his situation; he saw that the muster at Marlborough was a step to revolution, but he could not see the enormity of the offence that he had given, and above all he was ignorant of the policy, and even of the commission, of the archbishop of Rouen. He issued orders to Geoffrey to appear in London before the barons of the kingdom, and to the bishops and justices who had joined John, to leave him immediately as a traitor.² He was, however, so far in the dark that he allowed Geoffrey³ to leave London and join the party of malcontents, who had now advanced by Oxford, where they had picked up S. Hugh of Lincoln, to Reading. He himself proceeded from Norwich to London, and thence to Windsor,⁴ to watch the movements of the other side. There he was met by a summons to attend a conference or parliament of the barons, which was to be held on the 5th of October at the bridge over the Lodden, about four miles from Reading and twelve from Windsor.⁵

The 5th of October was a Saturday,—an unlucky day for oaths and contracts, as men thought,—and the chancellor, much against his will, set out from Windsor with the bishops of London, and the earls of Arundel, Norfolk, and Warren, who seem to have stuck to him until now. But at the fourth mile from Windsor his heart failed him; he saw that his companions were without spirit to support him, and that his policy was not to endanger his own liberty. He sent on his friends, and complaining of illness, returned to the castle. They, not rendered more enthusiastic by his desertion, proceeded to the place of meeting.¹

There were assembled the two archbishops, the bishops of London, Winchester, Bath, Lincoln, and Coventry; John earl of Mortain, William of Arundel, Roger Bigod of Norfolk, Hamelin of Warren, and William Marshall of Strigul; Geoffrey FitzPeter, William Briwere, and many other barons, with their retainers. As soon as the assembly was got together and order proclaimed, the archbishop of York stood up and exhibited his complaints; the documents by which the king had authorized his return and his participation in public business were read and explained by Hugh of Nunant to the barons.² The archbishop of Rouen followed; he had been sent by the king to arrange the election at Canterbury, with the fullest powers and the most private instructions, yet the chancellor had forbidden him to proceed on his mission—nay, he had sent him word that he would cross London Bridge at his peril; further, he had never once since he landed in April been consulted by the chancellor on any matter whatever.³ In the third place the justices, especially William Marshall, William Briwere, and Geoffrey FitzPeter, asserted that their counsels, which he was obliged by the king's express order to respect, were never attended to. Even the earl of Arundel, who seems to have wished to say what he could for him, could not deny this.¹ There were other complaints of a less general character. Hugh of Durham and his son Henry sent in the tale of their wrongs.² Henry de Vere in particular, who had been deprived of his estates through the chancellor's agency, probably in favour of Stephen Longchamp, who was his brother-in-law, was bitterly urgent against him ;³ Roger FitzRainfrai forsook him completely. The conclusion of the whole deliberation was put by the archbishop of Rouen ; he pledged the barons present to rise against the chancellor, to depose him as useless to the king and kingdom from the office of justiciar, and to appoint another in his place.⁴ Whether on this occasion Walter of Coutances produced his commission cannot be quite ascertained, but he clearly left the assembly assured that he had good authority for his proceedings. The bishops of London, Lincoln, and Coventry were deputed to fetch the chancellor at once to hear his fate, but before they had gone far they met his messengers reporting that he had returned to Windsor.⁵

Sunday, October 6, was a busy day. Very early, messengers began to pass between Windsor and Reading. The chancellor sent two of his confidential servants to persuade John to intercede for him ; knowing John's weakness they were to promise any amount of money to him and his like. Personal mediation, as in the case of William de Braiose, who had courage to make a move for his friend, was also employed. But all that was attained was an invitation to meet the barons at the old place on the morrow ; if the chancellor declined to appear there and give account of his misdeeds, he was to expect no more consideration from the barons.¹ By the arguments of his friends he was prevailed on to promise to attend and so pledge himself. The bishops lost no time. At High Mass in the morning the bishop of Bath acted as celebrant, and Hugh of Nunant preached ; the point of application of his sermon was the excommunication of all aiders and abettors of the outrage on the archbishop of York. Not only Aubrey Marney and Alexander Puintell, but the chancellor himself was named in the anathema, and denounced as excommunicate.²

Probably the news of this act diminished still further Longchamp's inclination for a parley. The postponed meeting did not take place ; both parties dreaded treachery. The barons, on the Monday morning, after marching in order out of Reading, crossed the Lodden and sent their baggage under the charge of a strong guard through the forest to Staines, whilst they themselves proceeded on the highway towards Windsor.³ The chancellor on his part advanced about two miles to meet them, when he was met by one of his knights, Henry Biset,⁴ who had seen the division of the forces and the larger part taking the London road. He immediately gave the alarm ; the malcontents were going to seize the capital. Longchamp hastily returned to the castle, and, having made a hurried arrangement for its defence, started, as he supposed, in pursuit : crossed the Thames and took the northern as the shorter road, in order to intercept the enemy. The barons hearing of his departure, pursued him at full speed, and it became a race who should reach London first ; the chancellor's retinue, having the start, arrived a little before the others, but not in time to avoid a skirmish in which Roger de Plasnes, John's justiciar, was killed¹ by Ralph Beauchamp, one of the chancellor's knights. This must have occurred somewhere near Hounslow, where the direct road from Windsor meets that from Staines, which the barons had taken.

As soon as Longchamp arrived in London, he called together the citizens in the Guildhall,² and entreated them to defend the king's right against the attacks of John, who, according to his view, had thrown away every scruple, and was now plainly aiming at the crown.³ To his dismay, his words seemed without effect. Archbishop Geoffrey, in his passage through the capital, the week before, had made too good use of his time; he had taught his friends to regard the struggle as merely an attempt to unseat the justiciar, no treason being contemplated towards the king.⁴ The magnates of the city were divided,—Richard FitzReiner, the head of one party, took the side of John. Henry of Cornhell was faithful to the chancellor.⁵ These two knights had been sheriffs at Richard's coronation, and both represented the ancient burgher aristocracy: Reiner, the father of Richard, the son of Berenger, had filled the same office;⁶ and Henry was the son of Gervase of Cornhell, who had held the sheriffdom of Kent, which, with that of Surrey, the son now held. It is probable that Richard headed the party of change, and Henry, who was more closely connected with the country interest, and, through his office of former of the mint, with the exchequer, that of order.⁷ The division in council was so even that the chancellor thought it his safest plan to take up his quarters in the Tower. This he had scarcely done when John arrived. He was welcomed by Richard FitzReiner with open arms, and entertained in his house, where he learned the terms on which he was to expect the adherence of the city.¹ The burghers had long been anxious to obtain for themselves the royal recognition of their corporate character, or communa. This had been opposed to the theory of Henry II., who, instead of conferring political or municipal independence on towns by charter, preferred to deal out his benefactions by the medium of fines, keeping thus the power of withdrawing them in his own hands. Henry knew and probably disliked the foreign idea of the commune: "tumor plebis, timor regni, tepor sacerdotii."² John, however, had no scruples. He was ready to promise for the whole party that they would swear to observe the rights and customs of the citizens, and accordingly in the morning of Tuesday, when the assembly met at S. Paul's, this large and aristocratic body was fully represented.³ The city had, indeed, quarrelled with Longchamp by refusing, at his request, to shut the gates against John, and a large proportion of the burghers was prepared to take extreme measures against him.⁴

The scene in S. Paul's seems to have been a repetition of that of the Lodden. First Geoffrey, then Hugh of Nunant, told the story of the chancellor's misdeeds; the chester, and of 400*l.* the profit of the Mint for a year, in all 1,600*l.* He must have been closely connected in this way with the chancellor, and his connexion with the court may have set him in opposition to the supporters of the guild or communa. This theory seems to be supported by the fact of his marriage with Alice de Courcy;

and that of his daughter with Hugh Nevill, the master forester of England. See Mr. Stapleton's preface to the Liber de Antiquis Legibus, p. 11.

wrongs of Hugh de Puiset and the ignominy heaped on the justices were not forgotten.¹ Then, for the first time, Walter of Coutances produced the commission dated in February, addressed to William Marshall and his fellow justices, and directing that in case of the chancellor's misconduct he should be superseded by the archbishop.² The barons, at John's instigation, at once recognized the letter as genuine, and declared by acclamation that the chancellor was no longer the governor of the kingdom, that the archbishop of Rouen was now the king's chief justiciar. John himself should be regarded as regent, "summus rector totius regni ;"³ next under him should be the archbishop as justiciar; under him the other justices would have no difficulty in acting, and again the whole administration of the country would be able to work. In this recognition of John the assembly went beyond anything that had been contemplated by Richard or even by Walter of Coutances; the office of regent, if it existed formally at all, being filled already by the queen-mother, whose absence from England had thrown considerable additional weight into the scale against Longchamp. This done, oaths were largely taken : John, the justiciar, and the barons swore to maintain the communa of London ;⁴ the oath of fealty to Richard was then sworn, John taking it first, then the two archbishops, the bishops, the barons, and last the burghers, with the express understanding that, should the king die without issue, they would receive John as his successor.⁵

The sentence had still to be enforced on Longchamp, and the citizens willingly joined in besieging the Tower. Unfortunately for the chancellor, it was not victualled for a siege, or, with time on his side, he might still have won.⁶

of success.

Henry of Cornhell was ready to divide the city in his favour; John, having got all that he wanted, might be bought over, especially as his object now would be to undermine the authority of the new justiciar. The party had been brought together by an accident, and any accident might dissolve it. But the state of the stores would not admit of Longchamp standing a siege, and both Geoffrey and Hugh of Nunant saw that their only safety was in his downfall. He was obliged to offer terms to the new powers, and early on the Wednesday the four bishops of London, Lincoln, Winchester, and Coventry,¹ were sent in answer to his application, and to declare at the same time the resolution of the assembly. According to Giraldus, they found him in an abject state of prostration, mental and physical; he knelt before them—he swooned away from the violence of his agitation. Richard of Devizes confirms the story of his fainting, and adds that he was recovered by the sprinkling of cold water on his face; he ascribes the swoon to angry excitement and not to fear.² He was told that he must resign the seal, and surrender the king's castles.

He refuses to resign.

He declared that he would do neither; he charged the barons with disloyalty to Richard; already they had given the kingdom to John. He threatened them with the king's anger, if he should ever live to see him. As for the castles, how could he surrender them? None of his house had ever yet been a traitor. Hugh of Nunant argued like a brute—"Do not talk to us about your house, but do what you ought to do; what cannot be avoided, it is of no use to dally over. Depend on it, your house, young as it is, cannot account you its first traitor."³ Prostrate as Longchamp was, he held his ground in argument until evening, when, having tried to bribe John,¹ and found that if he were successful with him, there were, besides, more enemies than he could purchase, he yielded at nightfall to the entreaties of his servants, and allowed one of his brothers to go to John to say that he agreed to give hostages for his appearance before the justices the next day.² The hostages were his brother Osbert and Matthew de Cleres.³ Whilst this was being done, or perhaps, earlier in the day, the bishops executed one little piece of spite against him, by procuring the election of William Postard as abbot of Westminster, to the destruction of the chancellor's scheme of promoting his brother Robert.⁴

In the evening he agrees to appear the next day before the justices.

The barons met in great force early on the morning of Thursday, October 10th, in the fields to the east of the Tower, and there at last William Longchamp stood face to face with his accusers.⁵ With singular ill-feeling, Hugh of Nunant undertook to declare the charges and the ultimatum of the barons. For justiciar they would have him no longer; bishop he might be still, but justiciar he was not, and as chancellor they would do their best to strip him. He might keep three castles, Dover, Cambridge, and Hereford; but the rest he must resign; he must give pledges to keep the peace, and might then go where he liked. Longchamp could scarcely have entertained any hope of changing the mood of his enemies by a speech, but he seems to have been overwhelmed by the volubility of the bishop, at once declaring the indictment and pronouncing the sentence. When he found words he declared himself innocent of every charge. His fellow justices could,⁶ he said, if they were questioned, justify all that he had done to raise revenue for the king, and for every farthing he had so raised, he could render an account. I, the chancellor of the king and justiciar of the kingdom, sentenced contrary to the form of all law, yield to the stronger, for yield I must."¹ So much said, and the words were true and not deficient in dignity, the meeting closed. That night Longchamp slept in the Tower;² on the Friday he gave up both that and Windsor, and moved with his baggage to Bermondsey.³ On the Saturday he proceeded, in company with bishop Gilbert of Rochester, and Henry of Cornhell, to Dover.⁴ His reason for going into Kent was said to be that he might lay down at Canterbury the cross of his legation which had expired on the death of Clement III.; but the events that followed showed that this was a mere pretext.⁵ He had been compelled to swear to surrender all the king's castles and to leave the appointment of constables for his own three, to the justices;⁶ until this was completed he was not to quit the country. Windsor and the Tower he had given up, but he could not bear to do more. Neglectful of the safety of his pledges, his brothers Henry and Osbert,⁷ as well of his own oath, he attempted, in the dress of a woman, to escape on board ship, on the Thursday after his arrival at Dover.⁸ This was prevented; he was dragged into the town and imprisoned with great ignominy in a cellar. The justices, on hearing of his discomfiture, issued immediate orders for his release, and having compelled him to yield in every point, let him go his way. He crossed over to Whitsand on the 29th of October. His misfortunes did not end here; he was seized, plundered, and put to ransom by the Flemish nobles.¹

He is taken and insulted, Oct. 18; leaves England, and lands at Whitsand, Oct. 29.

This little crisis occupies in our histories a place more proportionate to the interest of its personal incidents than to its constitutional importance.² The proceedings of the barons were revolutionary. Although the question of allegiance to the king does not enter formally into the complication, the insurrection must be regarded as of the same character as those by which from time to time the king's tenure of power has been directly attacked,—the machinery which has the power to make laws interposes with effect to meet a case, and to overcome difficulties, for which the laws have failed to provide; to punish the offences of a person who by circumstances, as in this case, or on theory as in case of the monarch, is above the ordinary process of law. The accused, when such a consummation is imminent, cannot expect to secure the benefit of legal treatment; rightfully or wrongfully he must be condemned; for he whom in such a position it is possible to bring to trial, has fallen too low to be able to resist, although not so low as to be safely spared. Nor does our history present us with a case in which the wrong doings of such a person, have by themselves provoked the revolution which overwhelms him. He falls under the accumulation of hatred, not because of it; it is because there is some one ready to take his place, who cannot afford to wait. So it may often be that the pretexts of revolution are out of all harmony with its real justification, and have nothing whatever to do with its definite causes. Longchamp's position was unrighteous and tyrannical; the hatred he had inspired was widely spread and not unwarranted; the movement by which he fell was of the nature of a conspiracy; the real objects which his enemies had in view were strictly selfish aims after personal or political aggrandizement. It was, however, a good precedent against John himself in after years.

the archbishop of Rouen at

The man who appears to the most advantage in the matter is the new minister, the Pilate of Rouen, who, if not a strong man, was an honest one, and in the main gave himself as thoroughly as Longchamp had done to the king's interests. If we consider that he was sent by Richard to England to hold the balance of power between John and Longchamp; to humour John as long as he could do so without encouraging him in disaffection; to strengthen the chancellor unless he found that it was no longer possible to keep peace between him and the barons; that he knew all the time that Longchamp was trusted by Richard, and that John only lacked the power to be a traitor; and if we consider further that in the motley band of malcontents with whom he had to work, there were not two who had the same object in view; that John was striving for the increase of his own power and the right of succession, that Geoffrey was struggling for the see of York, whilst Hugh de Puiset, who for the moment was working with him, was bent on vindicating his personal independence of his metropolitan; that the barons cared far more to get rid of Longchamp than to administer the kingdom under himself, also a foreigner, and scarcely less suspected than Longchamp:—we may, I think, regard his conduct of the crisis as skilful and complete. He managed to get rid,

by John's aid, of the chancellor who could govern no more, and yet to keep the substance of power as far as ever out of John's reach. His success in the crisis

But his own administration was not very successful. Although strengthened by the support of the queen, he was unable to meet the manœuvres of John aided by Philip of France. The result was that from the moment of Richard's captivity, he lost his grasp on the reins of government, and the country was only saved from anarchy by the management of Hubert Walter, who superseded him after two years and three months of office in the opening of the year 1194. His comparative failure as a minister.

The archbishop's first piece of work was a failure. The day of Longchamp's surrender, October 10, letters were issued for a meeting of the bishops at Westminster on the 22nd, and for the election of a successor to Baldwin.¹ The king had not yet withdrawn his nomination of the archbishop of Montreal; the monks were suspected of wishing to elect the chancellor; the archbishop of Rouen, who was supposed to have the king's instructions, was also suspected of wishing to exchange a poor archbishopric for a rich one.² The monks were really inclined to a delay which prolonged the day of their own independence and would increase the chances of their patron. But the justiciar was pressing, and they could resist no longer. After a preliminary meeting on the 22nd of October, they made the election on the 2nd of December. The bishop of Bath, whom no one seems to have thought of before, was elected. He died a few weeks after, but his election had satisfied the occasion.³ No new one could be made before the king had been consulted, and leave to elect granted. The primacy continued for a year and a half longer unfilled. Business of the election to Canterbury. Election of Reginald Fitz-Jocelin

As a matter of course, Longchamp's more offensive acts were now remedied; the bishop of Winchester was reinstated in the castle of which he had been deprived; the county of Northumberland was delivered over to Hugh de Puiset;¹ Osbert and Henry Longchamp were removed from their sheriffdoms, and the latter imprisoned at Cardiff.² The Yorkshiremen who had got into trouble about the Jews were restored to their estates.³ The bishops were instructed to take no notice of the legate's letters. Geoffrey returned to his see, and before Christmas had time to excommunicate his late ally the bishop of Durham.⁴ Hugh bore the sentence with equanimity, and met it by contriving new difficulties for the metropolitan, for whose sanctity he had been so lately ready to fight. The archbishop of Rouen regarded the chancellor as lying still under the Reading anathema. Longchamp, as soon as his legation was renewed, issued an excommunication, in which he included the whole ministry. Not content with this, he named seriatim all his great enemies,—the bishop of Winchester, Hugh of Nunant, the four co-justices;⁵ Richard Malbysse, the persecutor of the Jews and ally of Hugh de Puiset; Roger FitzRainfrai who had deserted him at the last; Henry de Vere, his brother Stephen's competitor for the Baudemont heritage; Gerard Camville, the delinquent of Lincoln; Stephen Ridell the chancellor of John, and the best endowed clerk in the diocese of Ely; Master Benedict, who pretended to bear the king's seal; the earl of Salisbury and the count of Meulan ; two of the Bassets, and Simon of Avranches, lord of Folkstone, are thrown in, perhaps, as having taken part in the Dover outrage ; Earl John himself is spared, and Hugh Bardulf ; but the latter is ordered to give up the sheriffdom of Yorkshire to William Stuteville, and John, if he does not take care, will find himself excommunicated on the next Quinquagesima Sunday.

His threats addressed to John.

Before the chancellor ventured on this act he had received very encouraging news from Rome. The pope had not yet renewed his legation, but addressed him as if it had never been interrupted.¹ The savage attack made upon him by the bishop of Coventry had caused some little reaction in his favour. Peter of Blois wrote manfully for him ;² Celestine III. would hear nothing from the other side ; he argued, in fact, from his knowledge of Richard's trust in Longchamp and the obsequiousness of the bishops and barons in the days of his prosperity, that the attack on him was more prompted by envy and jealousy than it really was.³ The chancellor's stedfast purpose was to make his way back to England. After his expulsion he had passed through Flanders to Paris, where he had been received with processions, at his own expense, by the bishop at Notre Dame.⁴ Returning to Normandy he found himself treated everywhere as excommunicate ; neither the office of chancellor nor the title of legate spared him this humiliation.⁵ Whilst he was there, Philip returned from Palestine.

Historians have recorded of the early events of 1192 little more than the cross-fire of excommunications ; the interest of the period is in the crusade. John's plots and Longchamp's counter-plots lie below the surface. But we can see that Philip's return has introduced a new element into the calculations of both; that Philip's object is to injure Richard wherever he has the chance, by stirring up war on the Continent and persuading John to unsettle England.

Proposals of Philip and Longchamp to John.

John spent Christmas at Howden, with bishop Hugh, learning how to behave under excommunication.¹ Early in the year he received two communications. Philip invited him to France to a conference, offering him his brother's French possessions with the hand of the precious Alais,² William Longchamp offered him a round sum in money if he would contrive his restoration.³

Longchamp visits Philip.

John listened, to both the tempters, contrary as their purposes were. He had found by this time that the archbishop of Rouen was not inclined to give way to him, and that the title of ruler of all England which he had assumed, was less effective than the more constitutional rule of the justiciar. He promised to visit Philip; he also promised to do his best for Longchamp. It would seem that Eleanor was the first to hear of these negotiations, and the news quickly brought her to England. The chancellor had visited Philip in order to lay before him a complaint of the seizure of his property by the Flemish nobles;⁴ and the juxtaposition of two such men was not a little alarming. The queen landed at Portsmouth on the 11th of February,⁵ and found John ready to sail to France. Very determined he proved himself. Between Sexagesima Sunday and Easter the queen held four councils of the barons, at Windsor, Oxford, London, and Winchester.⁶ John showed himself more obdurate than was conceived. He not only persisted but plotted. He actually succeeded in persuading the constables of Windsor and Wallingford to hand over their castles to him.⁷ It was only by the severest remonstrances that he was prevailed upon to give up his projected visit. The archbishop, with Eleanor and the justices, threatened that the moment he embarked they would seize, in the king's name, every castle and manor that he possessed.¹

In the midst of the excitement caused by these discussions, the bishop of Ely landed at Dover and took up his quarters with his sister in the castle.² John had listened to his overtures and now that he and the archbishop of Rouen had quarrelled, the support of the chancellor would be very important to him. Accordingly, about the fifth week in Lent, Longchamp wrote from Dover to the heads of the government, — the queen, John, and the justices, offering to stand his trial and demanding the restoration of his property. Now, Eleanor as well as John would have listened. She had prevailed already on the archbishop to release the estates of the see and withdraw the excommunication;³ Longchamp also withdrew his sentence against the justices. But even if these could have safely admitted his return, the barons were implacable. Little news came from Palestine. John's succession seemed more than imminent, and with Longchamp they would have nothing to do. John pleaded the cause of his new friend; he saw, in fact, that his arrival gave him the opportunity of making new terms for himself. One of the subjects marked out for consultation in the sitting of the barons was, what notice should be taken of John's treasonable conduct in corrupting the constables of Windsor and Wallingford.⁴ By holding out a threat to side with the chancellor, he entirely escaped inquiry into this. And this was, per-which Longchamp had bought him. "Within a week," he told the justices, "the chancellor will pay me 700*l.*

" and you. Money is what you see I want. You know " what I mean; you are wise men."¹ The justices saw that they must buy him. They offered him 2,000 marks, 500*l.* of which were to be raised from the chancellor's estates.² John graciously accepted the sum, and peremp-tory letters were at once written by all parties to the common enemy, directing him, if he cared for his life, to quit England. He obeyed; sailed on the Thursday in Holy Week; landed again at Whitsand, and, as the English believed, betook himself at once to the court of Philip as a traitor.³ It is probable that his occupation was rather that of a spy; but we lose sight of him entirely for nearly a year. His envoy, the prior of Hereford, had already made his way to Palestine and poured into the king's ears the complaints which had so impressed the pope.⁴ He found Richard at Ascalon in April. The king was, as might be expected, disturbed at the news, but the distressed state of the crusade at the moment prevented his leaving. Six weeks afterwards, in May, at the Canebrake of Starlings, John of Alençon, the vice-chancellor, whom he had left in Normandy, reached him with new complaints; this time, probably, from the archbishop of Rouen:⁵ but just now it was out of his power to leave with honour. The break-up of the crusade was, however, imminent, and after a bold but destructive march on Jerusalem in the height of summer, the three years' truce with Saladin was concluded, and in October, Richard embarked for home. The next news of him is in January 1193, when he is reported to be in prison in Austria. Capture of the king.

During these months the history of England is nearly a blank. Eleanor had succeeded in producing a temporary lull in the political strife. Hugh of Nunant had time to persecute his monks; Geoffrey of York to offend the dignity of the southern as well as to quarrel to the point of anathema with the clergy of the northern province. The justiciar had his hands full of Norman business. Whilst he was acting as the king's lieutenant in England, his own unhappy province was laid under interdict by the legates sent in consequence of Longchamp's complaints.¹ Philip was in arms, and only prevented by a resolute remonstrance of his barons from entering Richard's territories. Old bishop Hugh de Puiset had to be recalled from his retirement and sent into France to negotiate. The queen's pacific influence in England.

Eleanor seems to have continued in England during this time, and her presence was a pledge of peace. Longchamp lurked in Normandy and Aquitaine.² John nursed his grievances at Marlborough and Lancaster. At the Michaelmas exchequer, Richard Malbysse and William Percy were admitted to the possession of their lands until the king's return, for a fine of 20 marks. Gerard Camville was still in possession of Lincolnshire; Hugh of Nunant was sheriff of Warwickshire, Leicestershire, and Staffordshire; Henry Longchamp at Cardiff in prison.³ Minor acts of 1193.

¹ It was not in consequence of Longchamp's complaints that Normandy was laid under interdict, but because the steward had refused to receive the legates without the king's licence. Ben. Pet. ii. 247. R. Devizes, p. 43.

Rumours of
capture.

Towards Christmas, great uneasiness began to be felt in England as to the fate of the king. The pilgrims who had stayed behind him in Palestine were flocking home, and the last that had been heard of him was that the ship in which he had left Acre had been seen at Brundisium.¹ Rumours of his being in trouble reached the country. Soon after Christmas, John received from Philip the news of the capture and went over to Normandy in consequence.² After attempting to prevail on the Norman barons to swear fealty to himself, he joined Philip and agreed, according to the proposal of the last year, to become his vassal for his brother's dominions, including, as rumour said, England as well as Normandy.³ He then returned to England, got possession of Windsor and Wallingford, and demanded of the barons their recognition of him as king, now that his brother, as he said, was dead.

The archbishop of Rouen behaved with great circumspection and moderation. The first step was to discover where the king was; for this purpose the abbots of Boxley and Robertsbridge were sent to Germany.⁴ To open communications with him when found, William of S. Mere l'Eglise, the prothonotary,⁵ was directed to follow, and he was joined by Hubert Walter, who, returning after Richard from Palestine, had heard in Sicily of his misfortunes.⁶ Savaric, bishop of Bath, was directed to

³ The treaty made with Philip on this occasion is printed in the Fœdera, i. 57; it is dated at Paris in January, and amounts to a partition of the inheritance of Richard. It is most curious, in our present question, as containing a special provision for the securing to Hugh "Constan' episcopo" safety and restoration in case of peace being made with Richard. This Hugh can be none other than Hugh of Nunant, and Constan' is a misprint for Coventren'. The bishop of Coutances at this time was William of Tournebu who presided from 1179 to 1199.

the imperial court to make the best terms he could.¹ Embassy to Henry VI. Savaric was the emperor's kinsman and friend. The abbots met the king in Franconia in March, and from that time he was in regular communication with the government at home.²

The chancellor was one of the first to find his way to him. Richard received him with unreserved delight, Longchamp visits Richard. and sent him back to England with powers to raise or to treat for the raising of the ransom, and a general commission to do his best for him.³ But the urgent business of the kingdom took precedence even of the king's deliverance. John, as soon as the barons had definitely refused to listen to his proposals, took up arms. Windsor and Wallingford he had secured before his visit to France; they were now surrendered to him in form⁴; Nottingham and Tickhill had been in his hands since the year 1191; Lancaster and the Peak were fortified, and enabled to resist. He had hired a large force of Welsh mercenaries, whom he placed in Windsor.⁵ He had increased the number of his friends; John in rebellion.

Hugh Bardulf, and even William Stuteville, had become his men.⁶ A great fleet of French and Flemish vessels appeared off the coast to co-operate with him,⁷ whilst Philip was using both force and fraud to gain a strong hold on Normandy. But the archbishop of Rouen was equal to the occasion; he gladly showed that there was no complicity between himself and John, and all the divided parties flocked to his standard. pared to defend the coast,¹ and utterly defeated the design of invasion. Wallingford, Windsor, and the castle of the Peak fell before the justices.² Archbishop Geoffrey and bishop Hugh laid aside their spiritual weapons and joined to besiege Tickhill.³ But it was not the purpose of the government to reduce to extremity one who might any day become king. The news of Richard was too uncertain; and, much against the will of the barons, Eleanor persuaded the justiciar to conclude a truce with John from May to November.⁴

for securing

By this measure time and peace were gained for the compassing of the king's redemption. This had been, of course, the earliest thought in the archbishop's mind. Before John had begun hostilities, he had called a council of bishops and barons to Oxford for the 28th of February,⁵ whilst Savaric was on his way to the imperial court, and before it was actually known that Henry VI. would require a ransom. What was done at this assembly we are not told; probably the difficulties occasioned by John's behaviour may have prevented its being held, or anything else of the kind being contemplated before the arrival of the ministers who had been in communication with the king. On the 20th of April Hubert Walter landed with authentic news,⁶ and it was his mediating influence, probably, that induced the contending parties to make the six months' truce. A few days later, arrived a letter from the king, dated April 19th, stating that the sum of 70,000 marks was required for his liberation.⁷ To raise this the justices demanded an aid of a fourth part of all revenue, lay and clerical, with an equal sum to be levied on personal property, and a scutage of 20 shillings on the knight's fee: all the wool of the Gilbertines and the gold and silver of the churches.¹ Money raised for the ransom.

Whilst this was in process of collection, for no time was lost about it, arrived the golden bull of the emperor, brought by William Longchamp and delivered by him to the queen and justiciar at S. Alban's.²

Notwithstanding his high credentials and the assurance given by the king's letter that he still possessed his confidence, his very approach revived all the angry feelings of the barons. Before landing he had been obliged to swear that he would attempt to transact no business but that of the king's release. During his stay in London he had, however, ordered the seizure of some houses belonging to the bishop of Coventry, who was in open rebellion, and this produced such an outcry against him on the part of the citizens that the interview between him and the court could not be held in the capital.³ Arrival of Longchamp as the king's envoy.

At S. Alban's he was not more welcome. "I come," he said, "not as a justice, not as chancellor, not as legate, " simply as bishop and the king's messenger."⁴ But the chief justiciar refused him the kiss of peace; when he demanded the hostages, as he was specially accredited to do, the queen refused to entrust to him her grandson William of Winchester,⁵ and the principal nobles declined to put their children in his power. Intensely chagrined, he contented himself with declaring the king's message and summoning the barons whose presence was required by Richard in Germany.⁶ His behaviour in London.

Longehamp recalled by Richard.

Richard had empowered his chancellor to undertake this task, probably as a demonstration of his own confidence in him, but he was not inclined to risk anything more; and fearing that his conduct might offend the barons, summoned him hastily to his side again. He was present with him at Worms on the 29th of June,¹ and a few days after negotiated a truce with Philip at Mantes, July 9.² A meeting had been arranged between Philip and Henry for June 24, at Vaucouleurs, the usual trysting place for the emperors and kings of France,³ but many circumstances happened to prevent it, and this truce, which was observed no better than the engagement to meet, was probably a substitute for it.

He negotiates peace with Philip.

Hubert Walter and others appointed to collect the ransom.

In the meantime Hubert Walter had, on the 30th of May, been elected archbishop of Canterbury,⁴ and to him, the bishop of London the treasurer, and the mayor Henry FitzAylwin, with William of Arundel and Hamelin of Warren,⁵—two men who had never wavered in their support of the chancellor,—the care of the money to be raised for the ransom was committed. The date of the assembly at S. Alban's cannot be fixed, but it was probably early in June. In the treaty of Worms, at the end of the same month, the emperor raised his terms. The sum required was now more than doubled; 150,000 marks were to be paid, of which 20,000 were to be the share of duke Leopold.⁶ A new budget was, therefore, necessary, but 100,000 marks being paid and hostages given, the arrangement of the new taxes was left until the king's arrival. Under the skilful hand of Hubert Walter everything was now concluded with facility; the autumn was devoted to the collection of the subsidies.⁷ John was away in France, whither he had gone again as soon as he had heard from Philip that the "devil was unloosed."¹ Philip himself was busy with his matrimonial difficulties. The chancellor was in attendance on his master, who had, moreover, summoned to him most of the other uneasy spirits, the ambitious and officious Savaric, and even Hugh of Nunant among the number.² The hopes of Longchamp's party began to revive; his brother Henry was released from prison,³ and by a zealous attempt at poetic justice, Matthew de Cleres ventured to arrest and imprison the bishop of Coventry on his way to the continent with bags crammed with peace-offerings for Richard.⁴ The process of excommunication had to be resorted to again to obtain his release.

Turn of affairs in Longchamp's favour.

The negotiations between Richard and John were carried on, strange to say, through the chancellor,⁵ who seems to have done his best to effect a reconciliation. John was prevailed upon to swear fealty to his brother, but the arrangement was defeated by the barons of Normandy, who refused to give up the castles of his honours in that province, and he returned in disgust to Philip to plot with him the longer detention of the king.⁶ Before the end of the year Richard summoned his mother, the justiciar, and the chancellor to Mentz, and as the absence of the justiciar from England practically vacated his office, he nominated the archbishop of Canterbury in his place.⁷ Hubert had indeed been at the head of the government since his return in April; he maintained the royal authority until the king's return against the frantic opposition of John's supporters, and had recovered all the castles except Nottingham and Tickhill before Richard's arrival.

Here, however, the administration of Walter of Coutances, and the period of political and personal strife end. The interest of the remainder of the reign is constitutional rather than political, and I shall attempt in the preface to the fourth volume of this chronicle to give a brief survey of it. At present it may not be uninteresting to state the later fortunes of some of the actors who appear no more after the conclusion of the period.

Later history of Hugh de Puiset.

Hugh de Puiset, after the capture of Tickhill, presented himself to Richard at Nottingham, and was received with great show of affection.¹ A few days later he attended the royal council at Nottingham, and after quarrelling at Selston with the king of Scots about lodgings,—a thing which he had done once before with Henry II.,—he drew down on himself a sharp rebuke from Richard.² Partly in consequence of the king's coolness he surrendered the county of Northumberland.³ Scarcely, however, had he done this when he repented, and offered the king, as soon as he had gone to Normandy, two thousand marks for its restoration. When Hugh Bardulf demanded possession, the bishop declined to surrender until he had his answer from Richard. Hugh Bardulf having consulted the king, took possession of the county and exacted, moreover, the 2,000 marks as well as the surrender of the manor of Sadberge.⁴ In September we find him at York annulling the archbishop's sentence against the canons.⁵ On Ash Wednesday, 1195, he was there again, confirming the sentence passed by the dean against Geoffrey's party.⁶ This was his last public act. On leaving York he fell ill at Crayke,⁷ but persevered in riding on to Doncaster; from

Doncaster he was taken in a boat to Howden, where, on the 3rd of March, he closed his uneasy although magnificent career.¹ His son Henry survived him several years. He was in difficulties in 1198.² In 1201 he went, as so many of his forefathers had done, to Palestine,³ but, unlike them, he lived to return. He died in or before 1212, and as his estates escheated to the crown, we may conclude that he left no issue.⁴

Hugh of Nunant despaired, as he well might, of Richard's clemency; not only was he known to be in the secret of all John's schemes, but his brother Robert had actually been the emissary who proposed the continuance of the king's imprisonment and refused to be a hostage for him on the ground of his being John's liegeman.⁵ One of Richard's first acts after his liberation was to arrest Robert and order Hugh to stand his trial in the clerical as well as in the secular courts, as bishop as well as sheriff. In the council of Nottingham he failed to appear, and was summoned again on the 31st of March 1194.⁶ The suit of the monks against him was being prosecuted in the Curia regis. He was allowed by the king to purchase his pardon and restoration for 5,000 marks,⁷ in March 1195; but Robert was still imprisoned, under the careful superintendence of the lady Richenda at Dover, where he died.⁸ The bishop sinks into obscurity from henceforth; although his suit with the monks lasted his life, it is uncertain whether he ever returned to England. He seems to have hung about the court until his death. In February 1198, archbishop Hubert restored the monks of Coventry, and

treatment of Long-

Of Longchamp's other opponents it is satisfactory to find that they were treated by Richard exactly as his minister had intended, and this, perhaps, shows that the king had exercised over his movements a closer supervision than was suspected. The bishop of Winchester was, after the council of Nottingham, dispossessed of his castle and county, and lost with them a large part of his inheritance.¹ Gerard Camville was deprived at the same time of Lincoln castle and county, and put on his defence for the charges brought against him by the chancellor. He recovered the king's favour for 2,000 marks, and on John's accession became a greater man than ever.² His wife Nicolaa stood also so high in John's estimation that on her husband's death she was appointed sheriff or custos of Lincolnshire in 1216.³ The Yorkshire knights also had to raise much larger sums than they expected, to recover the king's goodwill.⁴

Stephen Longchamp.

The fates of the several members of the Longchamp family were various. Stephen, the steward of Normandy, the friend and companion of Richard, survived his master, and on the loss of Normandy by John, after some attempts to maintain his possessions in both countries, went over to Philip.⁵ He was slain fighting for Philip at the battle of Bouvines.⁶ Henry, the sheriff of Herefordshire, after his release from prison, appears as sheriff of Worcestershire from 1195 to 1198; but after the death of the chancellor both he and his sons seem to have fallen under the king's displeasure.¹ The last we hear certainly of him is during the fourth crusade. He had placed his estates, before his departure, in the king's keeping,² and is mentioned by Villehardouin³ as joining the Flemish knights who passed through Piacenza and took the route of Apulia, instead of starting from Venice. He died in 1204,⁴ and the next year the king confirmed the gift of the castle of Wilton to another Henry the son of Hugh;⁵ of his two sons, William, the husband of the heiress of Croun, died before him. Osbert, after being sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk in 1194, was, with his brother, in disgrace in 1198,⁶ and no more is heard of him, except in private charters, until his death in 1207, when his wife Avellina paid a fine not to be compelled to marry again, and for the wardship of his heirs.⁷ His family continued in Kent until

In answer, I can only suggest either that he himself held Wilton only as guardian of his nephew, or that his sons if he had any surviving, had lost their title by joining Philip, as their uncle Stephen had done. His daughter-in-law Petronilla had claims of dower on the Wilton estate, which

chancellor.

The chancellor seems to have retained or regained Richard's full confidence and kept his office until his death. During the few years that succeeded Richard's return, he was in constant attendance upon him. Richard had reconciled him with his most formidable enemies before they quitted England, and it is probable that he never returned to the country where he had suffered so much. Anyhow, he passes away entirely from English history. He died at Poitiers in 1196,

⁴ To make an end of the Longchamps. The identity of the family with that of Wilton, I have I think established in the notes. It would be a most extraordinary thing if Herefordshire contained two families of exactly the same names and both holding lands under the Lacies. It is of Hugh de Lacy that Hugh de Longchamp held Wilton in 1168; from Walter de Lacy that Stephen held Frome Herbert, and Geoffrey his land at Kempley; and in close connexion with them he was a benefactor of Acornbury. (8th Report of Dep. Keeper, App. ii., pp. 136, 137.) Again, Hugh, the nephew of William the chancellor is closely connected with the Watervilles and Dives. (Eyton, Shropshire, ix. 77.) whilst on a journey to Rome to defend the king against the archbishop of Rouen. At Poitiers he was not unpopular, if we may believe that the cross of S. Martial wept a flood of tears at the moment of his death. He was buried in the abbey of Saint Mary du Pin, whose abbot Miles had been his fellow courtier for many years.¹

The restless career of Geoffrey of York cannot be here even entered on. The process by which he was being developed from his early quarrelsome violence into the character of a defender of constitutional liberties must have been now advancing, but its ripening belongs to the age of John.

Geoffrey of York.

Walter of Coutances remains. He also, as he advanced in years, sank the character of a statesman in that of an ecclesiastic. In 1196 he had a terrible quarrel with Richard and laid Normandy under an interdict, which the king bought off by an exchange of lands, giving for the land at Andely on which his Château Gaillard was built, an estate which suited the archbishop better. Walter of Coutances acquiesced readily in the transfer of allegiance to Philip, and died the "pater patriæ" in 1207.

APPENDICES TO THE PREFACE.

APPENDIX I.

MONACHUS FLORENTINUS DE EXPUGNATIONE CIVITATIS ACCONENSIS.

The following poem was first printed by John Basil Herold, in the Appendix to his Continuation of William of Tyre, at Basel, in 1549; it was reprinted in the same connexion in 1564. The text was derived from a MS. in the Hieronymite Library at Dôle. It was reprinted in 1866 by M. P. E. D. Riant at Lyons, with collations from the Oriel MS. II., and a MS. belonging formerly to the Church of St. Michael, Bamberg, and now to the Royal Library there; of these the Oriel MS. contains a fragment only; the Bamberg MS. is also incomplete. Herold's text, therefore, is still the only perfect one. Editions of the poem.

The author, whose name is known only from Herold's copy, was Monachus, a Florentine, who is there called bishop of Acre, but who appears really to have been archbishop of Cæsarea from 1181 to 1192, and patriarch of Jerusalem from that year to 1202. M. Riant has identified him with a person named Heimer or Haymarus, who is mentioned in a various reading of one of the MSS. of the Chronique d'Outremer; Recueil des Historiens des Croisades II., p. 242, note; and gives him as his full literary title the name of "Haymarus Monachus de Florentia, archiepiscopus Cæsariensis, postea patriarcha Hierosolymitanus." As, however, whenever his attestation to charters is found, it appears as "Monachus" only, I cannot think that this addition of the name of "Haymarus" can be regarded as certainly right. Monachus appears as a Christian name in many Florentine families; and our author seems to be the person mentioned in an account of the Translation of the Arm of S. Philip (AA. SS. Boll. May; I. 15-17), as a Florentine who was made chancellor of the Holy Sepulchre by the patriarch Amalric. But notwithstanding the learned and elaborate investigations of the last editor, a good deal of uncertainty prevails about him. The poem is an in- Authorship.

Monachus
of Florence.

Text of this edition. valuable commentary on the portions of the Itinerarium, and of the chronicles of Roger Hoveden and Benedict, with which it corresponds. The text of the following edition is mainly that of [Herold, and not that of the Bamberg MS. which M. Riant preferred; I have, however, where there was a clear case of error, placed the sound reading in the text. The various readings are only a selection from the other texts.

¹ in die sequente] These words, which with the rubric fix the capture of the Butler of Senlis to the morrow of S. Clement, give the most important chronological fact of the whole poem. The Itinerary mentions that the capture took place on the day of the marriage of Conrad and Isabella; (eodem die); therefore November

24 is the date of that marriage, and as archbishop Baldwin, the chief opponent of it, died on the 19th or 20th, no time was lost, as soon as he was out of the way, of completing the disgraceful transaction. ACCOUNT OF THE RETURN AND CAPTIVITY OF

ANSBERTUS; Historia de expeditione Friderici Imperatoris. Ed.

fidei triumphare debebant, distulerint; neuter tamen viam sine altero incipere volens alteri cedebat. Tandem zelo Dei ducti, dissimulantes si qua fuit inter eos odii dissensio, iter aggressi sunt. Rex Franciæ Philippus et nobilis comes Flandriæ cum magno comitatu per Italiam transeuntes, apud Januam transfretare volentes mare intraverunt; sed quia autumnalis aspe-ritas eos repulit, apud Messynam civitatem Calabriæ toto illo anno coacti sunt morari. Rex etiam Angliæ Ricardus impiger ad omnia negotia cum infinito exercitu et apparatu, pecunia etiam tanta qua omnes socios viæ Domini antecedebat, per mare cum multis galeis navigabat, et in eodem portu Messynensi supradicta necessitate cogitur applicare, et ibidem hyemare.

Dux etiam Leopoldus Austriæ diu accensus ejusdem pere- March and maluit tamen æterno militare Regi quam temporali. In Assumptione siquidem Sanctæ Mariæ viam Christianæ militiæ de Vienna se movens aggressus est, et Venetiis naves intrans per Illyricum et Dalmaticum mare remigare proposuit, sed

imum [110] ver hyemare compellitur; ubi etiam cum aliis qui simili causa detenti sunt, opportunum tempus transfretandi et vernalem auram mitiorem navigantibus expectavit.

A.D. 1190. Voyage of the duke of Austria. Accepta itaque opportunitate vernalis temporis, tam illi qui in portu Messinensi quam et ii qui apud Sadiram toto illo anno tædio affecti demorati sunt, iter propositum arripuerunt et ad portum Accaron secure et sine detentione applicuerunt. Erant autem in comitatu illustris ducis Austriæ Leopoldi, comes Sifridus de Niderl, et Dietmarus liber, et pauci ministeriales sui; Ortlebus videlicet de Winchil, Hngo de Pucperch, Heinrichus de Medlik, Albertus de Horn, Albero de Ceniliub, Pertoldus de Wurmz, Rudwinus de Gors et unus fratrum de Radun; quorum nullus secum reversus est, sed omnes prædicti fatali necessitate dies suos clausurunt, præter comitem Sifridum, qui fomitem infirmitatis secum reportans ægrotavit, et in via demoratus sequenti anno reversus est.

A.D. 1191. Conquest of Cyprus by Richard. Rex vero Angliæ morose navigans in Cypro applicuit. Ubi tunc regnum tenebat quidam Ysaachus, æquivocus illius qui Constantinopolitanum post mortem Andronici arripuerat regnum, et eodem imperio diviso post obitum Manuelis, qui eosdem principatus solus regebat, quis cum quilibet raperet quod posset, totam Cyprum iste suo dominio usurpavit. Cujus insolentiam et malignitatem quam dicitur in peregrinos pauperes exercuisse, rex Angliæ ferre non valens, captum eum secum et uxorem suam transvexit, et insulam eandem suis usibus vendicatum sibi etiam censualem fecit. Ipsum etiam apud Margatum munitissimum castrum relegavit. Idem itaque rex Angliæ primus et præcipuus in tota militia Christiana eo quod in facultatibus et in omnibus opibus alios præcedebat, et eos aspernatus postponebat, dominium sibi super omnes usurpabat. Regem etiam Franciæ, cui quamvis hominii jure obligatus teneretur, despectui habens, non reverebatur. Marchionem insuper Chunradum dominum Tyri, per quem eadem civitas post desolationem terræ Domini a Christianis retenta est, per quem etiam potestas Turcorum et Saladini principis eorum propulsata est, vilipendebat. Ducem etiam Liupoldum illustrissimum principem, quamvis non ita gloriose sicut decebat ibi manserit, pro abjecto reputavit: cujus fastus intemperantia ad cumulum sui damni cessit.

Richard's arrogance. Itaque cum idem rex et tota militia Christiana valido robore in obsidione Ptholomaidis diversis bellicis instrumentis laboraret, tandem viriliter instantes ipsam expugnaverunt et valida manu ceperunt. Incolas etiam, Turcos videlicet, usque ad vii. millia et amplius captivaverunt. Cujus etiam captæ civitatis dominium ita sibi soli vendicavit quod nec alios consortium habere permisit. Marchionem etiam Chunradum qui ab omnibus rex creatus erat, reprobabat, adeo quod ejus consilio dicitur esse interemptus. Duo siquidem cum eo

diu familiariter conversati, a vetulo (a Leone) de montanis missi ad ejus interemptionem, dum nihil de eis sinistri suspicaretur, eum cultellis perfoderunt et occiderunt. Qui tamen non impunes abierunt, sed pœnam dignam meritis exsolverunt. Capta igitur Acona et a nostris inhabitata, dum Saladinus conventionem de redi[112]mendis captivis Turcis facere differret, commotus rex Angliæ sicut vehementia sui furoris eum sæpius exagitavit, omnes trucidavit, præter paucissimos nobiles quos adhuc in spe alterius pacti captos reservavit. Dum itaque hæc omnia fierent, et ad Ascalonam quæ etiam a Turcis inhabitabatur et Christianis rebellabat, milites Christi festinant, Turci territi de captione Aconæ Ascalonam vacuum reliquerunt, et sine bello eam Christiani occupaverunt. Quam ipse rex Angliæ non sine scandalo aliorum eis redimendam dedit. Cum enim hominum raritas et penuria id faceret, ut nec inhabitari nec defendi ab incursu et invasione adversariorum posset, maluit eam recepto pretio sub districta conventionem relinquere interim, quam sine defensore et præsidio defensionis positam iterum perdere.

Rex itaque Franciæ non valens arrogantiam regis Angliæ, a quo debebat servitium non contemptum expectare, pati, Comite Flandriæ mortuo ibidem, revertitur, et per Italiam et per Tusciam transiens summo pontifici Lateranis Cœlestino loquitur; a quo bene susceptus et pie admonitus ad liberandam terram Domini eum instantius cohortatur. Insuper etiam ei ut filio carissimo et peregrino dilecto dona et paternæ benedictionis munera largitur et abire in [113] osculo eum dimittit. Cum itaque Mediolanum civitatem Liguriæ veniret, Imperatorem Heinricum de Apulia redeuntem in via invenit; nec subito convenerunt, sed quia aliqua dissensionis nebula inter eos latebat, non repente comparebat, eo quod prius in discordia quam cum Coloniensi Philippo pater ejus habuit, sibi ipse auxilium præstabat. Sed mediantibus aliis prudentibus et ex utraque parte se sapienter interponentibus, occasio hujus suspensionis extirpata est, et eum Imperator in osculo pacis susceptum et honestis muneribus honoratum, posthæc tanquam principem gloriosum et amicum dilectum cum honesto ducatu abire ad regnum proprium dimisit. Dux vero Liupoldus sequenti anno post reditum suum ducatum Stirensem mortuo nepote suo Otacharo, qui ei sine hærede moriens terram coram Imperatore Friderico sub testamento assignarat, post multos labores suscepit, et a filio suo Imperatore Heinrico Wormatiæ tam ipse quam filius suus Fridericus excellentissime investiti sunt.

enmity.

Rex Angliæ Ricardus, qui gloria omnes anteire voluit, et omnium indignationem meruit, in obsidione terræ et hæreditatis Domini plus cæteris et post cæteros moratus, eodem anno Incarnationis Domini M. videlicet CLXXXII^o; nescio utrum timore regis Franciæ qui prius ante eum recesserat, vel tædio peregrinationis affectus, pacem cum Saladino et Turcis ad v. annos faciens et firmans, cum uxore navigio post alios revertitur, et ventorum impulsione in mare periculis multis circumductus jactatur [114], tandemque ad Polam civitatem Ystriæ ad litus fertur et applicare cogitur. Ubi uxorem et familiam totam incertis undis maris relinquens, ipse per Forum Julii cum paucis, de periculis maris egressus et viam per terram aggressus, licet incognitus esse cupiens, a pluribus tamen cognitus et in via suis aliquibus captis, aliquibus truncatis, rebus etiam suis perditis, in Austriam ducis Leupoldi terram transivit. Ubi latenter transire volens et terra principis quem prius graviter et plurimum offenderat, incognitus exire volens, judicio Dei tactus laqueum incidit ejus, quem prius illaqueare voluit. Dum itaque arrogantiam ejus Divina æquitas diutius non sineret transire inultum, eum manibus et potestati tradidit illorum, quos ipse prius quasi contemptos abjecerat, et contumeliose reprobaverat. Justo siquidem Dei judicio, ut cum ipse in prosperis successibus suis illos honorare noluerit, quos dignos honore scire potuerat, ab eisdem etiam dedecorandis judicaretur. Circa Wiennam siquidem latenter moratus, pedes, duobus sociis tantum comitatus, in vili hospitio per exploratores inventus et captus est ab hominibus ducis Austriæ. Cum itaque idem dux illustris Anstræ plures causas adversus ipsum efficientes habuerit, jure ipsum in manus ejus Divino judicio traditum tenuit, sed tamen præter meritum ipsum honeste tractavit, et in castro suo Tyernstein juxta Danubium sito servari præcepit. Una siquidem et efficiens causa fuit quod eum in obsidione Aconæ quasi abjectum reputavit, quod etiam Ysaachium principem Cypri et uxorem suam ad sanguinem suum pertinentes captivavit; quod etiam Chunradum fi [115] lium amitæ suæ interemisse suspectus habebatur. Idem siquidem Chunradus princeps nobilissimus et adleta Dei invictissimus, consilio omnium sapientium qui expeditioni Domini interfuerunt, rex Jerosolimorum ordinatus et uxore illa sibi data, quæ prius commanebat Humfrido ejusdem terræ regi dicto, nescio quo divortio inter eos facto, ab omnibus, ipso solo rege Angliæ renuente, est elevatus. Post cujus mortem quæ supradicta est, comes Henricus de Campania in eadem expeditione diu cum multis expensis moratus tam in regno quam in uxore sibi successit. Itaque rex Angliæ diu observatus a duce Liupoldo Imperatori Heinrico quem etiam in negotiis regni et in filio sororis suæ, duce videlicet Heinrico quondam dicto Saxonis, multis modis contra dominum suum concitato, et in aliis regni impedimentis provocaverat, est representatus, sed non statim oblatu. Sinistra siquidem consilia ibi quæ inter æmulos ducis Leupoldi versabantur, finem rei imponere non sinebant. Dictum quippe fuit ei quod Imperator per consilia pravorum quorundam eum violenter rapere vellet et in suam potestatem redigere. Tandem omni suspicione remota inter eos conventio facta est, ut reductus in Austriam in proximo ad Neubunam, quæ et Spira dicta est, domino Imperatori committatur, hoc conducto inter eos facto, cujus exemplar jure subjunximus;

“ Hæc est forma conventionis sive tractatus habiti inter
 “ dominum Heinricum Romanorum Imperatorem et Liupoldum “ ducem Austriæ super incolumitate et pace regis Anglorum “ aliisque negotiis;

“ Ego Liupoldus dux Austriæ da-[116]-bo et præsentabo “ domino meo Heinrico Romanorum Imperatori regem Angliæ “ hoc modo seu tenore, quod idem rex sicut conductum est, “ donet domino Imperatori centum millia marcarum argenti, “ quarum ego medietatem habebō ad dotandam filiam fratris
 “ Anglorum regis, quam ducturus est unus filiorum meorum
 “ in uxorem. Hæc autem filia fratris regis Anglorum in festo “ Beati Michaelis uni filiorum meorum, quem ad hoc elegero, “ erit præsentanda, et medietas de jam dictis centum millibus “ marcarum argenti, videlicet quinquaginta millia marcarum ar-“ genti, in eodem termino erit solvenda; quarum dominus meus “ Imperator unam medietatem recepturus est, et ego aliam; altera “ vero medietas de eisdem centum millibus marcarum, vide“ licet quinquaginta millia marcarum quæ restant, persolvenda
 “ est usque ad initium Quadragesimæ proxime venturæ; cujus “ pecuniæ similiter dominus Imperator mediam partem habebit, “ et ego mediam; et quæcunque pars totius pecuniæ prædictæ
 “ sub quocunque numero domino Imperatori infra terminum “ illum, quo tota debet solvi, illius medietas sine malo ingenio “ mihi præsentetur. Dominus autem meus Imperator ducentos “ mihi obsides dabit, quod si ipse postquam regem Anglorum “ ipsi præsentavero, quod Dominus avertat, in fata concesserit, “ eodem rege in sua potestate existente, ipse rex mihi sine “ malo ingenio præsentetur; sed si me prius mori contigerit, “ eadem conventio uni filiorum meorum quem ad hoc elegero “ per omnia observetur, illi videlicet, qui ducturus est filiam “ fratris regis Angliæ in uxorem; et si illi non fuerit, alii filio “ meo eadem servetur conventio. [117.]

³ The giving of the sceptre and virge are placed by Benedict before the unction: and in this Brompton's version confirms Benedict. The version of Matthew Paris indirectly confirms the former order, for he represents the king as holding the sceptre and virge at the moment of coronation. At the same time, the king could not have taken the crown from the altar, holding the sceptre and virge. In the Pontifical of Egbert the sceptre and staff were given before the imposition of the cap. The order there is: 1, unction; 2, sceptre; 3, staff; 4, cap. The later usage corroborates Hoveden's account. See Maskell, Monumenta Ritualia, vol. iii. pp. 32-35.

Benedictus Judæus Eboraci,¹ qui cum a Christianis ita persecutus esset, et vulneratus, ut de vita desperaret, baptizatus est a Willelmo, priore ecclesiæ Sanctæ Mariæ Eboraci, in ecclesia Innocentium, et vocatus est Willelmus, et sic evasit mortis periculum, et manus persequentium. Quod cum cives Lundonienses audissent, invaserunt Judæos civitatis, et domos eorum combusserunt, et illos interfecerunt, pauci tamen evaserunt beneficio amicorum suorum Christianorum. In crastino autem coronationis regis misit rex servientes suos, et comprehendi fecit malefactores illos, qui civitatem incenderunt, non propter Judæos, sed propter domos et facultates Christianorum quas incenderunt et rapuerunt, et de illis quosdam fecit suspendi. Et eodem die fecit rex præfatum Willelmum, qui de Judæo factus erat Christianus, sibi præsentari; et ait illi, "Tu quis es?" et respondens dixit, "Ego sum Benedictus Judæus tuus de Eboraco;" et conversus rex [ad] archiepiscopum Cantuariensem et cæteros, qui dixerant ei prædictum Benedictum factum fuisse Christianum, ait illis; "Nonne dixistis mihi, quod ipse Christianus est?" et responderunt illi, "Etiam, domine." Et ait illis: "Quid ergo faciemus de eo?" cui archiepiscopus Cantuariensis, minus circumspecte quam esset necesse, respondit in spiritu furoris sui,² "Ille Christianus esse non vult, homo Diaboli sit:" debuerat enim respondisse; "Petimus

Eodem anno¹ Sibilla regina Jerusalem reddidit Saladino Scalonam pro liberatione Guidonis de Lezinant, mariti sui, et Saladinus permisit eum liberum et absolutum abire, et invenit ei salvum conductum usque ad civitatem Tyri. Quo cum venisset, Conradus Marchio non permisit illum intrare. Rex itaque ille, non habens in civitate ubi caput suum reclinaret, extra urbem Tyri in tentoriis remansit. Confluebant ergo ad eum Templarii et Hospitalares, et omnes Christiani qui propter metum paganorum dispersi erant in regione illa, et adhæserunt illi sicut domino et regi suo.

sunt gaudio magno valde. Saladinus igitur, magno congregato exercitu, venit prope exercitum Christianorum, et commisit cum eis prælium, feria quarta post festum Sancti Michaelis, in planitie inter Accon et Casale Episcopi, in quo prælio Saladinus confectus fuit et fugatus, ita quod ipse omnia tentoria sua reliquit Christianis, et amisit de melioribus militiæ suæ partem unam: et Christiani magnam partem suorum perdidit. Postmodum Saladinus recuperavit super gentem Christianam, propter peccata eorum, ita quod Christiani usque ad castra sua repulsi sunt; et Girardus de Rideford,¹ summus magister Templi, et marescallus Templi cum fratribus duodeviginti, qui optime se continuerant, ibi intercepti fuerunt; et aliam etiam amiserunt Christiani militiam usque ad milites quadraginta, et centum Turcoplos. Jan. 6.

The dean and treasurer refuse to apologize.

In crastino autem, cum omnis populus civitatis conveniret more solito ad metropolitanam ecclesiam, ut in ea propter diem solennem commodius audirent Divinum officium, et electus ille, et prædicti decanus et thesaurarius, essent in choro una cum canonicis ejusdem ecclesie, ad pacem et concordiam inter eos faciendam; decanus et thesaurarius noluerunt electo suo aliquam facere satisfactionem de tali et tanta transgressione, sed superbe locuti sunt contra eum. Unde populus adversus eos iratus, cum in illos irruere vellet, electus non permisit eos. Illi autem valde perterriti fugerunt a facie hominum; quorum alter fugit ad tumbam Sancti Willelmi, et alter recepit se in domo decani; et electus excommunicavit eos. Unde factum est quod metropolitana ecclesia, illo die, a Divino cessavit officio.

Navigium autem regis Angliæ, cui archiepiscopus Auxiensis, et episcopus Baoniensis, et Robertus de Sablul, et Ricardus de Camvilla, et Willelmus de Forz de Ulerun præfuerunt, iter arripuit Jerosolimitanum statim post Pascha, de diversis portibus Angliæ, et Normanniæ, et Britanniæ, et Pictaviæ. Cujus navigii² pars quædam convenit in portu de Dertemue, et post moram aliquot dierum ibidem factam, cum prædictæ naves numero decem velificarent versus Ulixisbonam, et præteriissent quandam terram protensam in mari, quæ dicitur Godestert; et præteriissent Britanniam, habentes Sanctum Mathæum de Finibus terræ, vel de Fine Posternæ, in sinistra navigii parte, et mare magnum, quo itur in Hyberniam, in dextris navigii, dimiserunt totam Pictaviam et Gasconiam et Biskay in sinistra parte navigii.

Et cum præterirent jam mare Britannicum et mare Pictavicum, et venirent in mare Hispanicum, in sancta die Ascensionis Domini, hora tertia, arripuit illas tempestas valida et horribilis; et ab invicem in momento, in ictu oculi, sunt separatæ: et dum tempestas sæviret, et omnes clamarent ad Dominum cum tribularentur, Beatus Thomas Cantuariensis archiepiscopus et martyr, per tres vices visibiliter apparuit tribus personis qui erant in nave Landoniensi, in qua erant Willelmus filius Osberti, et Gaufridus aurifaber, cives Landonienses, dicens illis: "Nolite terreri; ego Thomas Cantuariensis archiepiscopus, et Beatus Edmundus³ martyr, et Beatus Nicholaus confessor, constituti sumus a Domino custodes hujus navigii regis Angliæ: et si homines hujus

civitatem Silviam, quæ in finibus illis tunc temporis ultima fuit omnium villarum Christianitatis; et erat adhuc ibi Chriscrepta erat de manibus paganorum, et facta Christicola, ut supra dictum est. Ignorantes igitur illi qui in nave illa erant, ubi essent, emissa navicula sua navigaverunt ad ter-bono et magno comitatu. Accesserunt ergo ad civitatem: et cognita adventus eorum causa, episcopus civitatis Silviam, et regis Portugalensis in vindictam imperatoris Africae patris sui, anno sexto³ proximo præterito defuncti in obsidione apud

Lundonienses ab illis recedere; sed et navem illorum froggo-runt, et de asseribus illius fecerunt civitatis propugnacula; promittentes et omnimodam securitatem facientes, quod rex Portu-

Africæ, die Nativitatis Sancti Johannis Baptistæ, transivit fluvium Thagi per vadum, et omnis exercitus ejus cum eo; et obsedit castellum Sanctii regis Portugalensis, quod dicitur Turresnoves. Rex vero Portugalensis misit legatos suos ad peregrinos, qui in navibus venerant ad civitatem Ulixisbonæ, et petiit ab eis succursum contra Sarracenos. Quingenti igitur viri bene armati, et ex omnibus qui in navibus venerant præelecti, fortiores et animosiores, elegerunt magis mori in bello pro nomine Jesu Christi, quam videre mala gentis suæ, et exterminium; et relictis navibus et sociis suis, perrexerunt ascendentes per fluvium Thagi usque ad Sanctam Herenam, quæ distat a civitate Ulixisbonæ per duas dietas: et invenerunt ibi Sanctium regem Portugalensem auxilio et consilio destitutum; paucos enim habebat viros bellicosos, et fere omnes inermes. Et jam prædictus imperator ceperat castellum regis, quod obsederat; et alium castellum quod dicitur Tumar,² castellum Templariorum, obsedit; qui cum audisset adventum peregrinorum timuit valde; et missis legatis ad regem Portugalensem petiit ab eo Silviam, et ipse recederet cum exercitu suo, et redderet ei castellum quod ceperat, et pacem haberet cum illo per septem annos. Quod cum rex Portugalensis facere nollet, prædictus imperator mandavit ei, quod in crastino veniret obsessurus Sanctam Herenam.

Quidam vero hominum qui in comitatu Roberti de Sablul et Ricardi de Camvilla venerant, malefactores erant et perversi; qui exeuntes de navibus in civitatem Ulixisbonæ ascenderunt, et per vias et vicos incedentes superbe locuti sunt cum populo civitatis; et cum mulieribus et filiabus civium per vim coinquinati sunt; et paganos et Judæos, servos regis, qui in civitate habitabant, fugaverunt, diripientes res et possessiones eorum; et domos eorum combusserunt, et vineas eorum vindemiaverunt, non relinquentes in eis uvam neque racemum.

Post triduum vero orta est² dissensio inter cives Ulixisbonæ et quosdam illorum qui in navibus venerant, ita quod ex utraque parte multi ceciderunt in bello interfecti: et clamor populi pervenit ad aures regias; et statim clausæ sunt portæ civitatis; et omnes qui de navibus in civitatem ascenderant ad edendum et bibendum, capti sunt et incarcerati, numero viri septingenti. Et antequam illi a captione regis exirent, fecit rex Portugalensis cum Roberto de Sablul et Ricardo de Camvilla pacem qualem voluit; videlicet in hac forma: quod mala præterita ex utraque parte remitterentur, et quod ipsi pacem firmam tenerent regi et regno, ubicunque fuerint in terra sua; et ipse rex similiter et sui pacem servarent peregrinis in tota terra sua, et quod arma et cætera omnia, quæ in prælio illo amissa fuerant ex utraque³ redderentur.

A.D. 1190. July 24. The ships leave Lisbon, and are joined by the rest of the fleet. Quod cum factum fuisset, Robertus de Sablul et Ricardus de Camvilla recesserunt a civitate Ulixisbonæ, cum classe regis Angliæ, in vigilia Sancti Jacobi apostoli, feria quarta, et eodem die venerunt ad introitum maris, ubi Tagus cadit in mare. Et eodem die venit illuc Willelmus de Fors de Ulerun, cum triginta tribus magnis navibus de navigio regis Angliæ; et erant pariter in eodem loco, de storio regis Angliæ, centum et sex magnæ naves, onustæ viris bellicosis, et victualibus et armis. In crastino autem festi Sancti Jacobi apostoli, feria sexta, Robertus de Sabluil, et Ricardus de Camvilla, et Willelmus de Forz de Ulerun, recesserunt a portu Ulixisbonæ cum navigio regis Angliæ, transeuntes per montem magnum protensum in mari, qui dicitur Spichel, et per portum Dalthath, et per Palmel, et per Sinnes, terram quandam arenosam protensam in mari; et per portum Deordimire,¹ et per montem magnum et excelsum, protensum in mari,² qui dicitur Caput Sancti Vincentii; in quo corpus Sancti Vincentii requievit intumulatum per multa tempora, usque dum translatum fuit ad civitatem Ulixisbonæ. Deinde transierunt ante portum Silvia, quæ tunc temporis ultima fuerat Christianorum civitas in partibus illis Hyspaniæ.³ Deinde transierunt per civitatem paganorum quæ dicitur Sancta Maria de Hayrun; et est notandum quare civitas illa sic nominatur Sancta Maria de Hayrun. Hayrun dicitur locus in quo civitas illa sita est, et Christiani, qui ædificaverunt eam, sic nominaverunt eam; et in memoriam Beatæ Dei genitricis Mariæ yconiam quandam lapideam super murum statuerunt. Deinde cum pagani prævaluissent adversus Christianos, obtinuerunt eam; et cum yconiam illam supra murum stantem invenissent, amputaverunt caput et pedes et brachia illius, in contemptum fidei Christianæ et Beatæ Mariæ, et projecerunt illa longius in Benedict, ii. 121.

mare. Quo facto, mare et tellus facta sunt sterilia, et fames prævaluit super terram illam, adeo quod omnia fere, homines et animalia, fame interirent. Tunc seniores populi et juvenes omnes, a maximo usque ad minimum, die ac nocte plorantes, et in sacco et cinere pœnitentiam agentes, recordati sunt yconia, cujus caput et manus et pedes abscederant; dicentes, "Peccavimus, injuste egimus, iniquitatem fecimus, quando caput et manus et pedes amputavimus. Quid enim mali fecit? Quæramus ergo illa, et apponamus ea in locis suis, ut sic saltem avertat Deus iram Suam a nobis, et a civitate ista." Et miserunt sagenas suas in mare, ubi projecerant caput et manus et pedes yconia, et trahentes ea in terram cum sagenis, apposuerunt caput collo, et manus brachiis, et pedes tibiis, et solidaverunt ea cum auro et argento primo et purissimo; et deinde statuerunt yconiam illam in loco honorabili, et habetur in magna veneratione usque in hodiernum diem: et statim cessavit fames, et terra dedit fructum suum.

Et est sciendum, quod in fluvio illo del Far de Meschines sunt illa duo pericula maris maxima, scilicet, Silla et Caribdis; quorum unum, scilicet Silla,¹ est ad introitum del Far prope prioratum de la Bangnare, et alterum, scilicet Caribdis, est prope exitum del Far: ad cujus cognitionem facta est turris lapidea in prædicta insula juxta fossatum regis Angliæ.

Et est sciendum, quod Silla¹ semper evomit et in altum jactat undas, et ideo necesse est ut transeuntes elongent se ab ea, ne² insanis obruantur.³ Caribdis vero indesinenter attrahit et absorbet aquas; et ideo caveant sibi transeuntes, ne absorbeantur ab ea. Quidam tamen incauti, vitare Sillam volentes, cadunt in Caribdim.

Deinde rex Angliæ, dum pax inter illum et regem Tancredum facienda moraretur, firmavit sibi castellum forte in supercilio montis ardui extra muros civitatis Messanæ, quod Mategriffon vocaverunt. Griffones vero ante adventum regis Angliæ erant potentiores omnibus regionem illam inhabitantibus, et odio habebant omnes homines ultramontanos; adeo quod pro minimo habebant illos⁴ interficere, nec erat qui adjuvaret. Sed ex quo rex Angliæ illuc venit, malitia illorum quievit, et potestas eorum minuta est, et facti sunt viliores omnibus inhabitantibus terram illam; et sperantes se posse contra regem Angliæ, sicut potuerunt contra cæteros in diebus antiquis, inciderunt in foveam quam fecerunt, et facti sunt profugi in terra. Gens autem Anglicana in maxima habebatur reverentia in regno Siciliæ.

Richard renounces the royal right of wreck in favour of the saved and of the heirs of the lost.

Deinde rex Angliæ, pro amore Dei, et salute animæ suæ et parentum suorum, quietum clamavit in perpetuum Wrec² per totam terram suam, citra mare et ultra: statuens quod omnis naufragus, qui ad terram vivus pervenerit,³ omnes res suas liberar et quietas habeat; si autem in navi mortuus fuerit, filii vel filiæ, fratres vel sorores ejus habeant res suas, secundum quod ostendere poterunt se esse propinquiores illius hæredes. The modern English of the prophecy is,—

When thou seest in Here hart reared,

Then shall English in three be dealed.

The one shall into Ireland all-to lead way,

The other into Apulia with pride, in speed,

The third in their own heart all sorrow endure (dree).

Whether there was, in the historian's mind, any connexion between wreke in the fifth line and the enactment of Richard which follows, is not quite clear.

Eodem anno plus quam centum millia paganorum, qui erant in regno Siciliae, servi regis Willelmi, post mortem ejus indignati sunt servire regi Tancredo; tum quia Henricus rex Alamannorum calumniatus erat regnum Siciliae, tum quia Ricardus rex Angliae, regnum Siciliae ingressus, magnam illius partem occupaverat. Et abierunt in montana cum mulieribus, filiis et filiabus, et pecoribus suis, et habitaverunt ibi, opprimentes Christianos, et multa mala eis facientes. Sed audito quod pax et finalis concordia esset inter regem Angliae et regem Tancredum, redierunt in servitutem regis Tancredi; et datis ei obsidibus de pace servanda, reversi sunt in domos suas, colentes terram sicut coluerunt eam tempore regis Willelmi, et servi facti sunt sub rege Tancredo.

Auctoritate quidem legationis suæ ad episcopatus, et abbatias, et prioratus, et ad alias religiosorum domos hospitaturus veniebat, in tanta superfluitate hominum et equorum, et canum et avium, quod domus in qua ipse per unam noctem hospitabatur, vix infra tres annos subsequentes in pristinum statum redire posset. Clericis vero et laicis, ecclesias, prædia, terras et possessiones suas abstulit, quæ aut nepotibus suis et clericis et servientibus erogabat, aut damnabiliter sibi retinebat, aut in usus extraordinarios dilapidabat.² Nonne considerabat infelix ille quod moriturus esset? Eodem anno, tertia die post festum Sancti Michaelis, exierunt Saraceni a civitate Accon circiter quatuor millia armati, et combusserunt quatuor hurdicios per ignem Græcum; sed viriliter retrusi sunt per milites exercitus armatos, et amiserunt viginti Turcos occisos, præter multos vulneratos.

Deinde, inter festum Sancti Andreae et Natale Domini, fuit totus exercitus Christianorum armatus, ut insultum faceret in civitatem Accon: et Alemanni et Angli traxerunt scalas suas ad fossata, ut muro apponerent eas; et exierunt per posternas civitatis pagani, et abstulerunt Alemannis scalas suas, et Anglos fugaverunt a fossato, et funes ligaverunt super scalam Anglorum, volentes eam infra muros civitatis trahere; sed Radulfus de Tilli,⁴ et Humfridus de Veili,⁵ et Robertus de Lalande, et Rogerus de Glamvilla,⁶ ascenderunt super scalam Anglorum, et quater extinxerunt ignem Græcum superinjectum; et Radulfus de Thilli, cæteris propius accedens, abscidit cum gladio suo funes, et sic⁷ liberavit scalam illam a manibus paganorum.

Benedict,
ii. 151.

Eodem anno Ricardus rex Angliæ, audiens per communem famam, et multorum relationem, quod quidam vir religiosus erat in Calabria, dictus Johachim,² abbas de Curacio,³ de ordine Cistrensi, habens spiritum propheticum, et ventura populo prædicebat, misit pro eo, et libenter audiebat verba prophetiæ illius, et sapientiam et doctrinam. Eruditus enim⁴ erat in Divinis scripturis, et interpretabatur visiones Beati Johannis Evangelistæ, quas ipse Johannes narrat in Apocalypsi, quam ipse manu sua scripsit.

Hujus igitur visionis interpretatio talis est, secundum Johachim abbatem de Curacio: “ Mulier amicta sole, et luna sub “ pedibus ejus,” significat sanctam ecclesiam, sole justitiæ, Qui est Christus Deus noster, obumbratam et amictam; sub eujus pedibus mundus iste, cum vitiis et concupiscentiis suis,

“ habens capita septem, et cornua decem;” Draco iste diabolum significat, qui bene dicitur habere capita septem; caput enim diaboli omnis iniquus est: septem ponit, quasi finitum pro infinito. Infinita enim sunt capita diaboli, id est, persecutores ecclesiæ, et iniqui. De quibus licet infiniti sint, tamen idem Johachim in expositione sua ponit septem principes ecclesiæ persecutores, quorum nomina hæc sunt: Herodes, Nero, Constantius, Maumet, Melsemutus, Saladinus, Antichristus. Dicit quoque Beatus Johannes in Apocalypsi: “ Reges septem sunt: quinque ceciderunt, et unus est, et “ unus nondum venit;” quod idem Johachim ita exponit;³

³ Abbot Joachim's Commentary on the Revelation, Expositio magni prophetæ abbatis Joachim in Apocalypsim, was printed at Venice in 1527. His explanation there of the passages in the text is not in close agreement with the account given in Benedict and Hoveden, but is not sufficiently inconsistent with it to prove the latter to be a fabrication. The Bollandists contended that the whole account is a forgery, but this is extremely improbable; the inconsistencies between the two explanations are not greater than will commonly be found in the opinions taken at different times of any exponent of unfulfilled prophesy. It is extremely curious to mark the identification of the five kings who have fallen and the one already come; which is determined by the date, not of the prophecy, but of the interpreter. On this abbot Joachim, in the introduction to his commentary (fo. 10), after making the first four Herod, Nero, Constantius, and Chosroes, proceeds.

“ Quintum caput draconis fuit unus “ de regibus Babylonis Novæ, qui

² Although the inconsistencies of the interpretation of the prophecy are not sufficient to disprove the historical character of the interview between Richard and Joachim, the treatment of the following conversation by the two authors who give it throws great doubt on the details. In the Chronicle of Benedict, the abbot boldly promises that Saladin will shortly lose the kingdom of Jerusalem, and be put to death; and that victory is reserved for Richard, with the complete restoration of Palestine. This could not have been written after the comparative failure and return of Richard. Hoveden's version, by giving a margin of seven years from 1187, shows that it was written indeed before 1194; but the fact of it being thought necessary to alter the terms of the prophecy shows that it was written after the success of the crusade had become problematical, and perhaps after Richard's departure.

A.D. 1190, Richard's early arrival necessary. Angliæ, "Ergo quare venimus huc tam cito?" Cui Johachim respondit; "Adventus tuus valde necessarius est, quia Dominus dabit tibi victoriam de inimicis Suis, et exaltabit nomen tuum super omnes principes terræ."

Jochim's views of Antichrist.

Sequitur, "et unus illorum nondum venit, scilicet Antichristus." De isto Antichristo dicit idem Johachim, quod jam natus est in civitate Romana, et in sede apostolica sublimabitur, et de isto Antichristo dicit apostolus; "extollitur et adversatur super omne quod dicitur Deus. Et tunc revelabitur ille iniquus, quem Dominus Jesus interficiet spiritu oris Sui, et destruet illustratione adventus Sui." Et conversus ad eum rex ait: "Putabam, quod Antichristus nasceretur in Antiochia sive in Babylonia, de progenie Dan, et regnaret in templo Domini quod est in Jerusalem, et in terra illa ambularet in qua Christus ambulavit, et regnaret in ea per tres annos et dimidium anni, et disputaret contra Elyam et Enoch, et eos interficeret, et postea moreretur; et post mortem illius daret Deus sexaginta dies poenitendi, in quibus poenitentiam possint agere illi qui a via veritatis erraverint, et seducti fuerint per prædicationem Antichristi et pseudoprophetarum ejus."

Richard's views on the same.

Sequitur, "et cornua decem:" decem cornua diaboli sunt hæreses et schismata, quæ hæretici et schismatici opponunt contra decem præcepta legis, et mandata Dei.

Continuation of Johachim's exposition.

"Et in capitibus ejus septem diademata." Per diademata significantur reges et principes hujus sæculi, qui in Antichristo credituri sunt.¹

"Et cauda ejus trahebat tertiam partem stellarum cæli,² et misit eas in terram." Stellas vocat minores homines qui in Antichristo credituri sunt, et ideo dicit tertiam partem stellarum cæli, propter nimiam multitudinem hominum credentium in eo. "Et misit eas in terram," id est, in Gehennam mittet omnes qui perseverantes crediderint³ in illo.

"Qui stetit ante mulierem, quæ paritura erat, ut cum peperisset, filium devoraret." Diabolus semper insidiatur ecclesiae, ut partum ejus rapiat, et raptum devoret: qui benedicatur stare, quia nunquam declinat a malo, sed semper stat rigidus in malitia, et inflexibilis in versutia sua fraudis. Vel aliter, cauda ejus significat finem saeculi hujus, in qua surgent quaedam gentes iniquae, quae dicuntur Gog Magog, et destruent ecclesiam Dei, et subvertent gentem Christianam, et ex tunc erit dies judicii. Sed in tempore hujus Antichristi multi Christianorum in cavernis terrae et in solitudinibus petrarum morantes, fidem Christianam in timore Domini servabunt, usque ad consummationem Antichristi; et hoc est quod dicit: "Mulier fugit in solitudinem¹ Aegypti, ubi habet "locum paratum a Deo, ut ibi pascant eam diebus mille et "ducentis et sexaginta." Filius autem ejus masculus, "qui "recturus erat omnes gentes in virga ferrea," est praecipue Dominus noster Jesus Christus, Qui post passionem et resurrectionem Suam ascendit in caelum, sedetque ad dextram Dei Patris, et venturus est judicare vivos et mortuos, et saeculum per ignem. ¹ This is the famous description of Antichrist, written originally by Adso, to Gerberga, queen of Lewis “Outremer,” shortly before the year 954. Adso was afterwards abbot of Der. It has been at different times attributed to Augustine, among whose spurious works it is printed in the Benedictine edition, vol. vi., app. p. 243; to Alcuin, on whose work de Trinitate, lib. iii. c. 19, Opp., ed. Froben, i. 734, it is partly founded; to Rabanus Maurus, Opp. vi. 177: under these names it appears in various forms and with different titles; as also in the shape of a letter to archbishop Herebert of Cologne, from Albinus or Albinus, cir. 999 A.D. It may be found in the works of Alcuin, ed. Froben, ii. 528; ed. Quercetan., 1209; ed. Migne, ii. 1289 et seqq. The form in which it is given by Hoveden closely resembles that in which it appears in Rabanus Maurus, and very closely the version of the MS. quoted by Froben on Alcuin, as “Cod. “ omnesque populorum nationes Romanis subjacebant sub tributo. Inde ergo dicit Paulus apostolus, ‘ Antichristum non ‘ antea in mundum esse venturum, nisi venerit dissensio ‘ primum.’ Id est, nisi prius dissenserint omnia regni mundi a Romano imperio, cui pridem subdita erant. Hoc autem tempus nondum venit, quia licet videamus Romanum im-perium ex magna parte destructum, tamen quamdiu reges Francorum dominaverint, qui Romanum imperium tenere debent, Romæ dignitas ex toto non peribit, quia in regibus suis stabit. Quidam vero doctores nostri dicunt, quod unus ex regibus Francorum Romanum imperium ex toto et in-tegro tenebit: qui in novissimo tempore erit, et ipse erit maximus, et omnium regum ultimus, qui postquam regnum suum feliciter gubernaverit, ad ultimum Jerosolimam veniet, et in monte Oliveti sceptrum et coronam deponet. Hic erit finis et consummatio Romanorum Christianorumque imperii.

 Statimque, secundum prædictam Pauli apostoli sententiam, Antichristum dicunt esse affuturum, et tunc revelabitur qui-dem homo peccati, Antichristus videlicet, qui licet homo sit, fons tamen erit omnium peccaminum, et filius perditionis, id est, filius diaboli, non per naturam, sed per imitationem, quia per omnia adimplebit diaboli voluntatem; quia plenitudo diabolicæ potestatis, et totius mali ingenii, corporaliter habitabit in illo, in quo erunt omnes thesauri malitiæ et iniquitatis absconditi. ‘ Qui adversatur,’ id est, contrarius est Christo, et omnibus ejus membris: ‘ et extollitur,’ id est, in super-biam erigitur; ‘ supra omne quod dicitur Deus,’ id est, super omnes deos gentium; Herculem videlicet, et Apollinem, et Jovem, et Mercurium, quos pagani deos esse existimant; super omnes deos istos extolletur Antichristus, quia majorem et fortiorem se his omnibus faciet; et non solum supra hos, sed et supra omne quod colitur: id est, supra Sanctam Trinitatem, Quæ solummodo colenda et adoranda est ab omni creatura, ita se extollet, ut in templo Dei sedeat, ‘ ostendens se tanquam sit Deus.’ Nam, sicut supra dixi-mus, in civitate Babiloniæ natus, Jerosolimam veniens, circumcidet se, dicens Judæis: ‘ Ego sum Christus vobis ‘ repromissus, qui ad vestram salutem veni, ut vos, qui dis-‘ persi estis, congregem, et defendam.’
 ‘ Tunc confluent ad eum omnes Judæi, existimantes se Deum suscipere; sed suscipient diabolum.¹ Sive etiam ‘ in

¹ Of this curious document I am able to give no other account than Hoveden has done in the rubric. It is not found in any of the apocryphal writings of early date, nor was it known to Malvenda, who in his learned work De Antichristo has collected all the legends and traditionary interpretations of scripture touching Antichrist. At first sight it may seem to be a mere abridgement of the principal features of Adso's letter, but the reference to the death of Antichrist looks a little more ancient. Hoveden does not say to which of the Gregories it was attributed, but it was probably to S. Gregory the Great; with whose doctrine on the subject in the Morals on Job, it may be compared; and who is quoted in one version of Adso's letter as authority for the statement that S. Michael will kill Antichrist. On the whole it cannot, without further information, be determined whether it is an apocryphal work of the tenth century, or a still more audacious fabrication of the twelfth, like that of the divine letter on the observance of Sunday, which is given by Hoveden, under the year 1201, on the authority of abbot Eustace of Flay.

¹ The following list contains the names of most of the noble persons who died at Acre, or in Palestine during the siege of Acre: the majority belong to the years 1190 and 1191, but a few belong to 1192 and later. Queen Sibylla and her children were dead before Oct. 21, 1190 (Epp. Cantuar., 329); the archbishop of Canterbury died Nov. 19 or 20, 1190; Thierry of Montfaucon, archbishop of Besançon, died Nov. 23, 1191 (Gall. Chr. i. 127); Letard, archbishop of Nazareth, in 1190; Peter Aynard, archbishop of Arles, in 1189 or 1190; and the death of the abbot of Ford belongs to the latter year. The archbishop of Montreal, if it was William archbishop of Montreal in Sicily, was alive late in 1191; but probably it was the metropolitan of Petra, who bore the same title. The dates of the deaths of the inferior ecclesiastics would be difficult to determine certainly, nor are they of much importance, except to fix the time at which the list in the text was drawn up. MS. D. omits nearly the whole list.

¹ Ralph de Diceto, c. 659, gives a letter of Richard dated at Messina, Feb. 23, and brought to England by the archbishop of Rouen; addressed to the chancellor, Geoffrey fitz-Peter, William Marshall, Hugh Bardulf and William Briwer; associating the archbishop with them in the government of the country. He also, in the same column, gives an extract from another letter addressed to the same persons, the chancellor excepted, in which he directs that, if the chancellor shall not have managed the government according to the advice of the recipients, they are to take charge of it, and exercise the supreme power. The letter from which this is taken is given in full by Giraldus Cambrensis, with the date, February 20; (Ang. Sac. ii. 396); it contains an order that nothing is to be done without the assent and counsel of the archbishop of Rouen; and instead of lodging the supreme power in the hands of the recipients, secundum dispositionem vestram, he says, secundum prædicti archiepiscopi dispositionem: so that either Giraldus has interpolated the letter; or Ralph de Diceto, who, however, was an intimate friend of the archbishop, has garbled it; or, as is most probable, Richard furnished the archbishop with a whole pack of letters, to be played as circumstances might make it expedient. The archbishop of Rouen landed at Shoreham on the 27th of April. It is not improbable that he was anxious to be elected to Canterbury. There were at the time no less than five personal factions in the kingdom. 1. That of John, who was anxious to get the government into his hands. 2. That of the chancellor, who wanted to retain the government as the king's representative, against John; but wished probably for the primacy for himself. 3. That of the archbishop of Rouen, who, as against John, was loyal to Richard; but was active against the chancellor, whom he regarded as an unpopular if not a treacherous minister, and as a dangerous rival for the see of Canterbury. 4. The party of the justiciars, who represented the baronage generally, and were faithful to the king, but were only strong enough to play off John, the chancellor, and the archbishop against each other. 5. Geoffrey of York had also a small party, but was doubted, and I think persecuted, more or less by all the four others. Under these circumstances if Richard showed some little duplicity in uttering provisional or contradictory instructions, the statecraft or kingcraft was perhaps excusable.

Prima autem die mensis Martii, Ricardus rex Angliæ recessit a Messana, et perrexit inde usque ad civitatem Cathinensium (ubi requiescit sanctissimum corpus Beatæ Agathæ, virginis et martyris), ad loquendum cum Tancredo rege Siciliae, qui illuc obviam illi venerat. Cum ergo rex Tancredus audisset adventum regis Angliæ, exivit obviam illi, et cum summa reverentia, et honore regis excellentiæ debito, suscepit eum, et introduxit in civitatem.

² Hoveden is the only authority for the story, that Celestine kicked the crown from the emperor's head; which is commonly regarded as apocryphal. There is, however, nothing improbable in such an event; and if Eleanor were at Rome at the time, Hoveden's authority is good. The whole thing may have been accidental, for Celestine was an infirm old man; and it may have been interpreted as illustrating the well known imperious character of the pontiff. But it is quite as likely to have been intentional on the part of the pope, who was an uncompromising maintainer of his own supremacy, and whose temper at this advanced age was uncontrollable. On the whole I am inclined to think that Hoveden's credibility would not have been doubted, notwithstanding his being the sole authority, if it had not been for the controversial questions affected by the story. But as some doubt hangs over Eleanor's visit to Rome, I cannot venture to assert the truth of it.

about Tus-

Ut autem sciatur causa, quare dominus papa Coelestinus reddiderit Romanis Tusculanum civitatem suam, pauca repetamus, quæ prius gesta sunt. Electo et consecrato in summum pontificem Clemente (videlicet, ut moris est, Pisis,² ubi bonæ memoriæ Gregorius VIII. migrarat ad Dominum ex hac luce), domino Prænestino episcopo, misit idem dominus Clemens absque ulla mora legatos suos ad cives Romanos, ut inter se et illos pax deberet firmissima reformari. Discordia siquidem concepta est occasione Tusculani, civitatis scilicet propriæ domini papæ, per x. milliaria distantis ab urbe, quam Romani gwerra insatiabili, ut eam sibi subjicerent, impugnabant: et etiam occasione conflictus qui fuerat inter Romam et Tusculanum, per quem plusquam quinque millia Romanorum eadem die gladio perierunt, a tempore Alexandri papæ usque ad tempora prædicti Clementis, inter ecclesiam duraverat et Romanos. Legati autem cum venissent ad urbem, induxerunt Romanos ut tanquam filii benigni ad patrem suum spirituales corda sua converterent, ipsumque ut pium patrem redeuntem ad eos devotissime curarent recipere, ac fierent unum de cætero sicut condecebat. Quibus responderunt in hæc verba Romani: "Hoc, quia sanctum et dignum est, ardenti desiderio, etiam plus quam dominus et pater noster, sicut veri et humiles filii, omni mora sublata, fieri peroptamus; ita tamen si damna nobis emendare, et injuriam simul, et verecundiam, quam occasione guerræ Tusculani sustinimus olim cum patribus nostris, et adhuc sustinemus, nobiscum pariter voluerit vindicare; et ad impugnandum Tusculanum, si necesse fuerit, milites suos in expensis propriis mittere, si pax ad honorem urbis, per subjectionem, et tributum annuum in scriptis redactum a Tusculano solvendum urbi, non poterit inter nos reformari. Si etiam Tusculanum ad voluntatem nostram faciendam tradere nobis promiserit, si post refutationem ineundæ pacis secundum antedictum tenorem inter nos et Tusculanum, aliquo dierum poterit Tusculanum habere." His itaque et quibusdam aliis libertatibus tandem a suprascripto Clemente papa Romanis concessis, idem Clemens accessit ad urbem, de qua extiterat oriundus, unde secundum conventionem dictam, Tusculanum et cives ipsius,¹ cum juxta petitionem suprascriptam a Romanis factam, non posset idem dominus Clemens Tusculanum Romanis subicere, ex tunc eos Romanis exponens, durius impugnabat. Et licet per quatuor fere annos vixerit in papatu, guerram tamen ipsam cum Romanis nullatenus ad finem perduxit; quamvis majorem fere partem Tusculanensium, quos

Quod ita concessum est illis. Euntes autem nuncii domini papæ ad regem, firmiter proposuerunt eidem, quod de Tusculano antedicta facta erat conventio inter summum pontificem et Romanos, et ut ideo domino papæ Tusculanum redderetur, necessitas exigebat. Unde inter reges sæpius oriebantur rixæ et contentiones. Post multum vero temporis misit rex Franciæ pro Conrado, et constituit eum principem domus suæ, et suum familiarem consiliarium, per cujus consilium et admonitionem rex Franciæ multa operatus est contra Deum et salutem animæ suæ. in manu forti, et restiterunt illis; et quia via illa ardua fuit et stricta, multi de hominibus regis Franciæ ibidem interfecti sunt. Rex vero Angliæ et homines sui interim custodiebant fossata exteriora, quæ erant inter exercitum Christianorum et exercitum Saladini. Conventio enim facta fuit inter reges, quod quancumque unus illorum insultum faceret in civitatem, alter illorum custodiret interim fossata exteriora, ne exercitus Saladini posset insultantibus a tergo nocere. Hæc autem conventio inter reges ideo facta fuit, quia in omni negotio, in quo prædicti reges et gentes eorum convenerunt, minus profecerunt quam fecissent si essent divisi. Rex enim Franciæ et gens sua parvipendebant regem Angliæ et gentem suam: et e converso.

Mense Julii, tertia die ejusdem mensis, feria quarta, cecidit magna pars murorum civitatis Acon juxta supradictam turrim. Cucurrit ergo Albericus Clement,¹ marescallus regis Franciæ, cum copiosa armatorum multitudine, ad murum cum vexillo regis Franciæ; et Conradus Marchio cucurrit cum cæteris ad prædictum murum, et apposuerunt scalas ut ascenderent. Et cum prædictus Aubericus ascendisset scalam, pagani, injecto in illum unco ferreo, traxerunt infra muros, et occiderunt, et alios quadraginta obruerunt lapidibus. Conradus vero retraxit se cum gente sua. Ipse enim et sui noluerunt neque lapides neque sagittas in paganos mittere; neque pagani in eum vel in suos. The Itinerarium gives 500 inferior captives and 200 knights; the ransom 200,000 Saracenic talents: the term to be the end of the month. Bohadin says 1,500 inferior captives and 100 knights; the ransom 200,000 aurei to be paid in three monthly instalments.

The forty days of Benedict and the text are perhaps accounted for as having elapsed actually before the hostages were sacrificed, ten days after the first instalment fell due and was not paid.

² The details of the negotiation for the surrender of Philip's half of the hostages are given much more fully in Benedict, and with still more detail by the author of the Itinerarium. The mission of the bishop of Salisbury, who was accompanied by count Robert of Dreux and Peter des Préaux, took place on the 5th of August. He returned to Acre on the 7th. On the 8th the duke, with the bishop of Beauvais, Guy Dampierre, William de Merliou and Robert de Quincy, or, according to the Itinerarium, Drogo de Amiens and Robert de Quincy, went to Tyre. The 9th of August was the first day for the performance of the capitulation, but it was delayed until the eleventh day after, to give time for the hostages to be brought from Tyre. The 10th and 11th were spent by the duke at Tyre; and on the 12th he returned to Acre. Ben. Pet. ii. 186, 187. Itiner. R. R. 242.

Eodem die Saladinus misit regi Angliæ munera pretiosa, et petiit ut ipse prolongasset diem quem statuerat amputare capita paganorum; et noluit rex diem illum diutius differre, nec munera Saladini recipere. Quod cum Saladinus vidisset et audisset, fecit amputari capita omnium Christianorum quos in captione sua habuit, scilicet xviii. die mensis Augusti, die Dominica.

He refuses to prolong the term granted to the Saracens; and Saladin beheads his prisoners.

Eodem die rex Angliæ movit exercitum suum, et appropiavit exercitui Saladini, et congressum fecit cum exercitu illius, et multi ceciderunt ex utraque parte vulnerati et mortui. Inter quos Petrus Mignot, quidam familiaris regis Angliæ, interfectus est; et rex Angliæ, quamvis audisset necem Christianorum interfectorum, tamen noluit anticipare terminum quem statuerat amputare capita paganorum.

The chancellor expels Gerard Camvill from the sheriffdom of Lincolnshire, and besieges the castle of Lincoln.

John takes the castles of Nottingham and Tickhill.

A peace is made.

Interim orta est gravis discordia in Anglia inter cancellarium regis et Johannem comitem Moretonii, fratrem regis propter castellum Lincolniae, quod cancellarius obsederat, expulso Girardo de Camvilla a baillia vicecomitatus Lincolniae, quam cancellarius tradidit Willelmo de Stutevilla, et constituit eum inde vicecomitem. Dum autem praedictus cancellarius obsideret castellum Lincolniae, castellum de Nothinham et castellum de Tikehil¹ regis, reddita sunt comiti Johanni, qui statim mandavit cancellario, quod nisi celerius recessisset ab obsidione castelli Lincolniae, visitaret eum in virga ferrea. Exterritus itaque cancellarius mandatis Johannis comitis Moretonii, recessit ab obsidione illa; et mediantibus episcopis multis et aliis fidelibus domini regis, diem colloquii statuerunt, in quo inter illos convenit in hunc modum;²

² The very scanty accounts of these proceedings given by Hoveden, Benedict, William of Newburgh, and Richard of Devizes, are unintelligible without some attempt to harmonize them. (1) Benedict's account is very short, and gives only one date and no documents. (2) Hoveden is very brief and undated, but does give a copy of the final agreement between John and the justiciars. (3) Richard of Devizes is fuller, but his dates are, as they stand, inconsistent; the document which he gives as the final agreement made on the 28th of July being actually dated April 25: and making no mention of the archbishop of Rouen, who was one of the principal parties to the final concord. (4) William of Newburgh gives a consecutive account of the affair, but places the events in the spring, instead of the summer or autumn, as they are placed in Richard of Devizes. It would appear that this divergency arises from the fact of the struggle falling into two campaigns, in which certain details are repeated. There were three conferences at Winchester, two attempts on the chancellor's part to seize the castle of Lincoln, and two settlements, one given by R. of Devizes, and containing no mention of the archbishop of Rouen; and the other given by Hoveden. At the risk of a long note, I will give the harmonized dates, on this hypothesis.

(2.) The chancellor's first attempt on Lincoln, early in the spring, before the arrival of the news of pope Clement's death, or the return of the archbishop of Rouen. W. Newb., lib. iv. c. 16.

(3.) Pope Clement dies, April 10 : the news would reach England in a fortnight, or perhaps less. The chancellor trembling for his legation makes a hasty peace with John, the form of which is given by R. of Devizes, p. 33; at Winchester, April 25.

(4.) The archbishop of Rouen arrives, April 27. The chancellor takes courage and renews hostilities. After Midsummer (Ben. Pet. ii. 207) the chancellor besieges Lincoln. The struggle closes with a second agreement, given in the text, in which the archbishop of Rouen is clearly recognized. This may be safely dated on the 28th of July, according to Richard of Devizes, although he gives, instead of the final agreement, that of the 25th of April.

The following are the points which prove the agreement given in the text to be a different act, and drawn up on a different occasion, from that given by R. Devizes, as against Sir Francis Palgrave; (Introduct. to Rot. Cur. Reg., vol. I. p. lv.).

(1.) In the April agreement each party chooses eleven commissioners; in the text each chooses seven: of the chancellor's eleven, one, the earl of Warren, does not appear among the seven. Of John's eleven, Reginald Wasseville does not appear among the seven: only three of the eleven are named by R. Devizes: Hoveden gives all the names of the seven. (2.) In R. Devizes there is no mention of the archbishop of Rouen; in Hoveden he is one of the chief negotiators: this can only be accounted for on the supposition that he was absent at the time of the transaction of the former act. (3.) In R. Devizes, the castle of Nottingham is entrusted to William de Wendeval, and that of Tickhill to Reginald de Wasseville: in Hoveden, Nottingham is given to William Marshall, and Tickhill to William de Wendeval. (4.) The Act of April 25 does not extend to the guardianship of the other castles; that given in the text does. (5.) The Act of April 25 engages the chancellor to support John's claim to the crown in case of Richard's death; but there is nothing about this in Hoveden. (6.) The treaty given in R. Devizes is provisional, that in Hoveden is final. There are some other points of interest in these chronological details for which I must refer to the preface to the present volume.

A. D. 1191. De consecratione et de adventu Gaufridi Eboracensis archiepiscopi in Angliam.

Geoffrey of York, after his consecration, returns to England.

Eodem anno, paulo post supradictam pacem inter cancellarium et comitem factam, Gaufridus,¹ Eboracensis electus, consecratus est a Willelmo² Turonensi archiepiscopo per mandatum Cœlestini summi pontificis : qui statim post consecrationem suam, immemor sacramenti, quod fecerat domino regi fratri suo, scilicet quod non rediret in Angliam antequam tres anni fuissent elapsi postquam rex ab Anglia recesserat, in Angliam venire festinavit.

Benedict, ii. 209.

He is forbidden by the chancellor to land; but persists.

Cumque ipse venisset ad Wissand in Flandria ad transfretandum in Angliam, prohibitum est ei ex parte cancellarii, ne in Angliam, contra sacramentum quod ipse regi fecerat, venire præsumeret; sed Eboracensis archiepiscopus a proposito suo propter mandatum illius desistere noluit. Unde idem cancellarius præcepit illum comprehendere, si in Angliam venisset.

Benedict, ii. 210.

He lands at Dover in September, and flies to the monastery of St. Martin.

Archiepiscopus itaque Eboracensis venit in Angliam, et applicuit apud Doroberniam mense Septembris,³ et servientes cancellarii stabant in littore, ut eum comprehenderent. Sed ille inde præmunitus antequam de navi exiret, mutavit vestes suas, et equo ascenso in cuius velocitate confidebat, ad monachorum cœnobium ejusdem villæ confugit. Et erat quasi hora diei sexta, et monachi missam inchoaverant; et cum legeretur epistola, et perventum esset ad locum ubi per Beatum Apostolum dicitur, "Qui conturbat vos, portabit iudicium, quicumque est ille;" et alibi in eadem epistola, "Uti nam abscondantur qui vos conturbant," intravit archiepiscopus Eboracensis ecclesiam, confidens in Domino, et pro munere gratum habuit prænosticium,⁴ referens illud ad perpetuam beatitudinis suæ quietem, et ad cancellarii venturam confusionem. Ministri autem cancellarii, quos ipse misit comprehendere eum, obsederunt ecclesiam per circuitum, ita quod ille exire non potuit, nisi per manus illorum.

Quadam vero die,¹ post celebrationem missæ, dum adhuc idem archiepiscopus indutus vestimentis sacerdotalibus staret ad altare, funesti satellites illi intraverunt ecclesiam, et manus violentas injecerunt in illum, et traxerunt extra ecclesiam; et sic extractum, immo distractum, viliter et ignominiose duxerunt per lutum platearum et per vicos; populus autem stabat clamans post illos, "O ignavi, quare ita ducitis illum? quid mali fecit? Archiepiscopus est, et regis filius, regisque frater." Sed illi non exaudientes vocem populi, duxerunt eum in castellum Doroberniæ, et tradiderunt eum Mathæo de Clere constabulario custodiendum.

³ It is indeed questionable whether the bishop was lawfully legate at this time; and the date of the letters themselves may depend on the time at which his legation was renewed. The questions will be: (1) Did his legation expire with the life of the grantor, Clement III. ? (2) If so, when was it renewed by Celestine III. ? (3) Was the renewal by Celestine sufficient to constitute him legate without the consent of the king, or (4) against the will of the king's representatives ? On some of these points see note in Epp. Cantuar., p. lxxxiii.

The Chronicle of Benedict in the corresponding place, although mentioning Philip's negotiation with the emperor for a passage for himself, says nothing about the design of capturing Richard; nor indeed could it have been at that time regarded even as a remote probability that Richard should return through the imperial dominions.

¹ This letter is given in the Chronicle of Benedict under the year 1192. Hoveden appears in his account of this proceeding of Geoffrey against Hugh to have massed his information in a way not usual with him whilst discussing subjects of which he had personal knowledge. Nor is either Hoveden or Benedict liberal in dates on the subject. So far as appears from the existing data, if Hoveden is right in ascribing the letter of Geoffrey given above, (p. 168), to this year, the struggle must have begun almost immediately on Geoffrey's landing in England. Geoffrey was released from his arrest on the 26th of September, and the synod at York, to which he summons the bishop of Durham, was fixed for Sept. 30. Either then the summons was issued before Geoffrey landed, or the letter is misplaced. The former is the more probable. At all events Hugh neglected to make profession of his obedience to the archbishop, and appealed to the pope, in consequence of which Geoffrey, after three citations, excommunicated him, in November or December 1191. Hugh spent Christmas at Howden with John; still lying under the sentence. On Candlemas day 1192 the archbishop again excommunicated him, Hugh now proceeding with his appeal at Rome. (Ben. Pet. ii. 237.) After Midlent, Mar. 15, Hugh offered to submit to arbitration, but the attempt failed. (Ib. 238.) Then it would seem the papal letter must have arrived, committing the matter to judges delegate. This letter is dated at the Lateran, where the papal court was from February to May 1192. (Jaffé, Reg. Pont. 891.) It was probably issued in February or March. The judges proceeded to hear the case at Northampton, at a point of time later than the conclusion of Benedict's chronicle, which contains the letter, but not the proceedings upon it; therefore probably in April or May 1192. After the first hearing it was adjourned to July 1st (p. 172). The final hearing seems to have been in October 1192, at Northampton. (Gerv. 1580, 1581.) According to Hoveden in the text, the third hearing was fixed for the 14th of that month. Hoveden has thus anticipated the course of events by nearly a year.

He commits to them the duty of declaring the excommunication of the bishop of Durham to be null.

Præterea dominus papa mandavit in aliis litteris suis, prædictis Lincolniensi et Rofensi episcopis, et abbati de Burgo, quod si constiterit illis quod Eboracensis archiepiscopus, post appellationem ad Romanum pontificem factam, altaria et calices fregerit, in quibus Dunelmensis episcopus, vel per se vel per alium, missam celebravit, idem Dunelmensis episcopus non teneretur aliquam facere subjectionem præfato Eboracensi archiepiscopo, quamdiu ipsi duo vixerint.

Bull releasing the Scottish Church from all subjection except to the see of Rome itself.

The letter has in fact been given already as the act of pope Clement III.; under the year 1188, vol. ii. p. 360. It is given in Benedict as Clement's, vol. ii. 234, under the year 1191, as here. Indeed, if it were Celestine's it could hardly have appeared in England before the time at which Benedict's chronicle ends, and must have been incorporated from Hoveden, in a copy of later date than Hoveden: for March 13 in the first year of Celestine falls in 1192. It is very improbable that both the popes Clement III. and Celestine III. should have issued the same letter with the same date. Occasionally I believe a papal letter is found repeated totidem verbis, but the coincidence of the dates is unparalleled. To which of the popes then are we to ascribe it? I think to pope Clement, because it appears first as his act in Hoveden under the proper year; and in Benedict, although misplaced, it bears the name of Clement. Hoveden finding it in his copy of the older chronicle at a date subsequent to Clement's death, forgetting, as the marginal note shows, that it had been inserted before, might easily think that Clement was a mistake for Celestine. Nor again is it likely that, if Celestine had been the first author of the letter, it would have been known to the author of Benedict's Chronicle, who clearly, at the time of writing, had not heard of the commission issued about the same time, for the hearing of the cause of Geoffrey and Hugh, just given above, Pampeluna.

Et est notandum, quod in terra regis Navarrae est una sola civitas episcopalis, quae dicitur Pampelune; sed multa castella sunt in terra sua, quorum unum dicitur Tudele, super fluvium de Ebera,¹ et alterum dicitur Lestaile,² et alia multa. In terra autem regis Castellae est³ una sola civitas archiepiscopalis, quae dicitur Tulette, quae sedet super fluvium Tagi, et ipsa habet primatiam Hispaniae: et in eadem civitate est alia episcopalis, qui dicitur episcopus de Musceravs,⁴ id est Suriens. Et in eadem civitate est mons quidam, de quo quotidie sumuntur plusquam mille camelorum onera, et tamen nunquam decrescit; quia quamvis spelunca fiat profundissima, tamen cras implebitur, si pluvia ceciderit super eum. Et terra inde sumpta defertur per circumjacentes provincias, et venditur ad lavandum capita, et pannos hominum, tam Christianorum quam paganorum.

Tertius annus regni Ricardi regis Angliæ.

Benedict,

Eodem die Natalis Domini, Ricardus rex Angliæ fuit in terra Suliæ apud le Turun as chevalers,³ volens post Natale Domini obsidere civitatem Jerusalem: et in die Sancti Hilarii habuit ibi colloquium cum Templariis et Hospitalariis, et cum toto exercitu, de civitate Jerusalem obsidenda; sed non fuit de consilio eorum ut ipse procederet, sed ut rediret ad firmandam Scalonam;⁴ et sic perrexit ille ad Scalonam, et firmavit eam, et in firmando eam fecit moram magnam.⁵

Et in die Paschæ, tenuit ibi commune festum extra villam in tentoriis. Et post Pascha fecit ipse equitationes per terram paganorum, et invenit segetes eorum maturas, et fecit omnes colligi a Christianis pro medietate segetum. Et in planitie de Scalona moram fecit usque ad Pentecosten: et die clausi Pentecosten² equitavit apud le Darun,³ castellum forte, juxta magnum fluvium Euphraten; et cepit in equitatione illa xxiv. paganos, et unum Reneez, qui quondam Christianus fuerat, et Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum negaverat; et rex posuit eum ad sagittandum, et sagittatus est.

¹ firmavit] om. D. I. The Itinerarium does not say that Richard fortified any of these places; he probably occupied them with his forces: but Gaza could have hardly been in his hands so early as Easter; for on Easter Tuesday he went in person to reconnoitre it. Itin. 330. Blancheguard and Galatia had been deserted by Saladin (Ib. 280); and were visited by Richard later. On April 22 he found the former unoccupied (Ib. 344); and he was at Galatia in June. Ib. 384.

count given in the Itinerarium, and are indeed obviously wrong. Richard took Darum on the Friday before Pentecost May 22 (Itin. 355), having besieged it since the previous Sunday (Ib. 352). The French arrived at Darum in time for Pentecost, and kept it there (Ib. 356). Before the date given by Hoveden Richard was marching on Jerusalem.

Newburgh places the shipwreck between Aquileia and Venice (lib. iv., c. 31), in accordance with the letter of the emperor, p. 195 below. Ralph of Coggeshall agrees with Hoveden in placing the landing at Zara; but there is probably some confusion between the place for which Richard took his passage from Corfu, and the place where the storm compelled him to land. The former was unquestionably Ragusa; the latter may have been Zara, Pola, or probably some place still further north. The emperor's letter should be the best authority, and that, if construed literally, places the shipwreck west of Aquileia, which would account both for the journey through Friuli and for the conduct of the count of Eodem anno, in Quadragesima, archiepiscopus Eboracensis venit Londonias, per mandatum justitiariorum regis: et cum venisset ad Westmonasterium cum cruce sua, prohibitum est ei a Lundoniensi episcopo, et cæteris episcopis Angliæ, ne ipse a modo præsumeret crucem suam portare in Cantuariensi diocesi. Et contumaciter respondit eis, quod propter illos non dimitteret: tamen, suorum fretus consilio, abscondit eam a facie populi, ne tumultus fieret in clero. Lundoniensis vero episcopus, illum pro excommunicato habens propter transgressionem illam, suspendit Novum Templum a Divini celebratione officii, et a sonitu campanarum, ubi prædictus Eboracensis archiepiscopus fuerat hospitatus; unde oportebat illum a civitate exire. ¹ Præterea] The following paragraph is very puzzling; and, as it is not found in Benedict, may be altogether misplaced. Andrew of Cha-vigni was in Palestine at this time, with the king: Itin. R. R., 302, 355, 405, &c. Either there must have been two persons of the name, which is improbable; or Andrew may have been sent on an occasional mission from Rome, which is equally so; or the chronicler has misplaced this part of his information, having been betrayed by his love of massing the incidents, instead of taking them chronologically. Richard moreover, as appears from the Itinerarium, did not hear of the deposition of the chancellor before the close of Easter, 1192, when the prior of Hereford brought to him, at Acre, the letters of William. The confusion of the events of 1191 and 1192 is very great. It almost looks as if the chroniclers were appalled by the news of Richard's capture, and gave dates for nothing else. In this case moreover it seems to illustrate the transmission of the pen from the hand of the previous historian to that of Hoveden.

Et quæsivit rex ut dominus papa cassaret omnes donationes reddituum ecclesiasticorum quas cancellarius post recessum regis fecerat: sed dominus papa noluit ita absolute illas donationes cassare, sed communiter cassavit omnes donationes reddituum ecclesiasticorum ad regem pertinentium, a quocunque factæ fuerint, et super hoc constituit dominus papa Lincolniensem et Lundoniensem episcopos iudices. Concessis autem litteris clericis domini Rothomagensis archiepiscopi, accesserunt ad dominum papam, et dixerunt ei de cancellario: "Ecce quomodo amabat eum."

Eodem anno, dum senescallus Gasconiae ægrotaret, comes Petragoriensis,¹ et vicecomes de Marchia, et fere omnes barones Gasconiae, terras regis Angliæ vastare cœperunt. Senescallus vero nec pacem nec treugas interim habere potuit, licet id pluries et perpluries requisisset. Convalescens tandem, invasit castra et munitiones prædicti comitis, et ea omnia debellavit et cepit, quædam ad opus regis muniendo, quædam funditus subvertendo. Similiter omnia castra prædicti vicecomitis cepit, et totum comitatum illius in perpetuum dominationi regis mancipavit. Postmodum filius regis Navarræ² affuit illi in auxilium cum octingentis militibus; et terram comitis Tolosæ pariter ingressi sunt, multaque castra circa Tolosam ceperunt, et capta ad opus domini regis munierunt; et multas alias munitiones funditus subverterunt; et usque ad portas Tolosæ progressi sunt, et fere sub ipsis muris pernoctaverunt.

¹Rithiencie] Rithientia, I. Henry was at Merseburg on the 8th of December (Böhmer, Regesta Regum, §c., p. 149): and nothing seems to be known of his movements until we find him at Speyer, in March 1193. The identification of Rithiencie has been scarcely attempted.

Böhmer simply queries it. William of Newburgh, however, read it Renhenza (lib. iv. c. 32), and it is probably Rense or Rhense, the well known rendezvous of the electoral body, between Coblenz and Mentz.

Ps. xxx. 5.

“ bitur fletus, et nos ad matutinum lætitia visitabit. Et quoniam spei nostræ maxima pars post Dei misericordiam in sinu vestro reponitur; lacrymantibus intimis, et toto corde deprecamur supplices et devoti, et quasi carissimi, postulantes, quatenus in negotio quod domino nostro regi, supra opinionem arduum, incumbit, vestræ diligentiæ partes et industriæ totis conatibus impendatis, et consilium vestrum, quod totis visceribus exoptamus, nullius recordatione angustiam, nullius adversitatis prospectu, nulla occasione, nulla temporalium aut felicitatis cautela, nobis et domino nostro, immo vobis potius, denegetis. Et quoniam præsentis animus, quam absenti plenius intimatur; et in personarum præsentia consilium præsentis articuli copiosius elucescit, et salubritatem Dominus inde sortietur effectum; idcirco nos a vobis affectione præacta lacrymabiliter postulamus, ut omnis difficultatis exceptione postposita, die Dominica ante Lætare Jerusalem, apud Oxenforde nobis et aliis domini regis fidelibus occurratis. Præsens enim negotium instantiam eam desiderat, ut omnis excusatio delitescat, et omnem dilectionem domino regi debitam, in casu quem loquimur, probationem credimus habituram. Dominum autem Batoniensem¹ noveritis de domino nostro rege quantocius liberando cum domino imperatore jam habuisse tractatum. Omnem enim impendit laborem et operam, ut ei præstet obsequium, et regiæ debitum reverentiæ, et honori gratum, et utile ad præsens, sicut et alias, plenum exhibeat famulatum; sicut ab eis recepimus, qui interfuerunt colloquio, quod de nostro domino liberando cum domino principe dominus Batoniensis habebat. Et quoniam universis eventibus Divinum est a Deo auxilium implorandum, rogamus, quatenus in universa vestra diocesi pro ipso preces apud Altissimum faciatis effundi, ‘ Plurimum enim valet deprecatio justis assidua;’ et inopportuna mulier in Evangelio meruit exaudiri, et, sicut ibi dicitur, Christus filium suscitavit, quia multæ pro eo lacrymæ fundebantur. ¹ Batoniensem] Savaric, bishop of Bath, was consecrated in September 1192. R. de Dic. 668. He claimed relationship with the emperor, who afterwards made him chancellor of Burgundy, but it is not known by what line the connexion existed. On Savaric's family, see a note in Epp. Cant. p. lxxxvii. The mission to Germany was no doubt confided to him on account of this connexion. This disproves Hoveden's statement lower down, p. 221, that Savaric received the bishopric from Richard during his captivity.

De nunciis missis per justitios Angliæ ad quærendum Ricardum regem Angliæ captum.

The abbots of Boxley and Robertsbridge, sent to seek the king, find him shortly before Palm Sunday, March 21.

He complains to them of the conduct of his brother John.

Audita¹ itaque regis captione, Walterus Rothomagensis archiepiscopus, et cæteri domini regis justitiosi, miserunt abbatem de Boxeleia,² et abbatem de Ponte Roberti in Alemanniam, ad quærendum regem Angliæ. Qui cum totam Alemanniam peragrassent, et regem non invenissent, Baveriam ingressi sunt, et obviaverunt regi in villa quæ dicitur Oxefer,³ ubi ducebatur ad imperatorem, habiturus cum eo colloquium in die Palmarum. Et comperto quod prædicti abbates venissent de Anglia, rex præbuit se illis hilarem et affabilem, quærens de statu regni sui, et de fidelitate hominum suorum, et de salute et prosperitate regis Scotiæ, in cujus fide fiducialius innitebatur. Ipsi vero, quæ audierant et viderant, testificati sunt. Conferentibus itaque illis ad invicem, conquestus est rex super prodicione Johannis fratris sui, comitis Moretonii, cui tot beneficia et honores contulerat immensos; qui se regi Franciæ contra eum dederat, et rupto fraternitatis fœdere, fœdus cum morte inierat, et pactum cum inferno. Super hoc itaque rex valde contristatus subito in vocem consolationis erupit, dicens; "Johannes frater meus non est homo qui sibi vi terram subjiciat, si fuerit qui vim ejus vi saltem tenui repellat."

³ Oxefer] Oxeforde, G. Leopold had imprisoned Richard at Tyernstein (Dürrenstein) on the Danube (Ansb. 114). The agreement for the surrender of the king to Henry was made at Würzburg, Feb. 14, 1193 (Ib. 119). A copy of it will be found in the appendix to the preface of this volume, p. cxli. Richard was brought to Speyer, (the Oxefer of the text is perhaps Ochsenfurt, on the Main, near Würzburg,) on Palm Sunday; and on the Tuesday after was surrendered to the emperor, March 23 (R. de Dic. 668): from Speyer Richard writes on the 26th to Canterbury for money (Epp. Cant. 362).

Nam inclinantem se regem erexit, et suscepit in osculo pacis, et confœderavit eum sibi; et ampliando honoribus et auxiliis, circumstante populo, et in lacrymas ruente præ gaudio, promisit, asserens quod confœderaret regem Angliæ regi Franciæ. Quartus annus regni Ricardi regis Angliæ.

Anno gratiæ millesimo centesimo nonagesimo tertio, qui erat quartus annus regni Ricardi regis Angliæ, Philippus rex Franciæ erat in Francia apud¹ die Natalis Domini, quæ feria sexta evenit, multum contristatus et confusus propter hoc, quod senescallus Normanniæ noluit tradere ei Alesiam sororem suam ; et frequenter misit nuncios suos in Angliam ad Johannem fratrem regis, comitem Moretonii, mandans ei qualiter rex captivus tenebatur,² et quod ipse nunquam exiret de captione imperatoris Alemanniæ ; adnectens quod, si ille voluntati illius et consilio adquiesceret, daret ei Alesiam sororem suam in uxorem, et redderet ei Normanniam, et Aquitanniam, et Andegaviam, et omnes alias terras transmarinas quas rex Angliæ Henricus, pater suus, unquam tenuit ; et quod ipse acquireret ei regnum Angliæ.

² These offers of Philip to John are placed by the author of Benedict's Chronicle, and also by Richard of Devizes, under the year 1192. It is of course possible that Philip renewed them in 1193, but Hoveden's silence as to the circumstance and its consequences in the former year looks as if he referred to the same transaction not. His words closely resemble the words of Benedict, and if taken from them satisfactorily show that he had mistaken his authority, who is amply borne out by Richard of Devizes. A document purporting to be the agreement between John and Philip for the division of Richard's dominions is given in the Fœdera, i. 57, dated Paris, January 1193.

The inhabitants bid him enter; but on consideration he retires, and burns his engines.

Rege autem Angliæ moram faciente in captione³ imperatoris Romanorum, mirati sunt universi de mora illius; et quidam, per prædicationem comitis Moretonii, qui semper prædicabat illum nunquam rediturum, dubitaverunt de illo, et de reditu illius. Unde factum est, quod Walterus Rothomagensis archiepiscopus, et cæteri justitiiarii Angliæ, licet comitem Moretonii ad deditionem coegissent, et castellum suum de Vindeshoveres, quod obsederant, fere cepissent, ceperunt a comite Moretonii inducias usque ad festum Omnium Sanctorum, castellis de Nothinham et de Thikehil⁴ remanentibus in custodia comitis, sicut antea fuerant. Castella vero de Vindeshoveres, et de Wallinford, et de Pecho, tradita sunt in manu reginæ Alienor, matris ejusdem comitis Moretonii, et aliorum custodum, qui tradent ea in manu illius, si rex frater suus interim non redierit.

non prosecuto.*

Proposed interview, on June 25, between Philip and the emperor, which does not come off.

Deinde post pacem istam inter imperatorem et regem Angliæ ordinatam, ipse imperator cepit colloquium inter ipsum et regem Franciæ, de pace facienda inter illum et regem Angliæ, mediante Willelmo Remensi archiepiscopo, regis Franciæ avunculo, et regis Angliæ consanguineo; et statuerunt diem colloquii inter Valculur¹ et Tulun, in crastino nativitatis Sancti Johannis Baptistæ, feria sexta.

The chancellor received at St. Alban's by the queen and the justices.

Cancellarius vero regis cum in Angliam intravit, cum humilitate magna ad Sanctum Albanum accessit; ubi occurrerunt ei domina regina mater regis, et dominus Rothomagensis archiepiscopus, et alii justitiiarii domini regis. Ibi etiam bullam domini imperatoris auream, fœdus indissolubile inter dominum imperatorem et dominum regem continentem, prædictus cancellarius justitiariis porrexerat; asserens, quod nec ut justitia, nec ut legatus, nec ut cancellarius, sed ut simplex episcopus in Angliam venit; nec ut incola, sed ut hospes, immo tantum ut nuncius domini regis. Injunxit etiam quibusdam baronibus, quod cum eo ad dominum regem venirent: videlicet, Gilberto episcopo Rofensi, et Sefrido episcopo Cicestrensi, et Benedicto abbati de Burgo, et Ricardo comiti de Clare, et comiti Rogero Bigot, et Gaufrido de Say, et aliis quampluribus.

The king summons certain prelates and barons.

Ibi etiam dispositum est, penes quem pecunia collata debeat residere: scilicet sub custodia Huberti Walteri Cantuariensis electi, et domini Ricardi Lundoniensis episcopi, et Willelmi comitis de Arundel, et Hamelini comitis de Warena, et majoris Lundoniarum,² sub sigillo dominæ reginæ matris regis, et sigillo domini Rothomagensis archiepiscopi.

June 25-29.
Interview of Richard with the emperor at Worms.

Interim appropinquante termino colloquii inter imperatorem et regem Franciæ, rex Angliæ per certa indicia cognovit quod, si colloquium illud haberetur, imperator et rex Franciæ confœderarentur contra archiepiscopos Coloniensem et Maguntinum, et contra duces de Luvain,¹ et de Lemburc,² et Saxonix, et multos alios magnates et nobiles, qui conspiraverant contra imperatorem propter necem episcopi de Leges, fratris ducis de Luvain, quam imperator machinatus erat. Timebat etiam rex Angliæ quod, si colloquium illud haberetur, ipse sine dubio traderetur in manus regis Franciæ. Unde rex Angliæ plurimum se intromisit, ut colloquium illud deficeret, et pax inter imperatorem et prædictos magnates fieret. Ad illius igitur instantiam imperator et magnates prædicti inter se pacis fœdus et concordix inierunt in hunc modum: "Quod imperator jurare fecit episcopos quamplures, et comites et barones, in animam suam, quod ille nec præcepit nec voluit ut prædictus episcopus de Leges³ occideretur; et quando hoc scivit, vehementer inde doluit. Et de satisfactione reddidit unicuique prædictorum virorum, qui contra eum conspiraverant, omnia castella quæ pater suus vel ipse eis abstulerat, et sic facti sunt amici; excepto duce Saxonix." Et colloquium illud, quod inter illum et regem Franciæ esse debuit apud Valculur, adnihilatum est.

His itaque peractis, imperator die Veneris proxima post festum Nativitatis Sancti Johannis Baptistæ venit Wermasiam, ubi dominus rex Angliæ erat. Et ibi colloquium celebratum est inter eos per quatuor dies; cui interfuerunt episcopi de partibus illis, et duces de

The archbishop gives the deanery to Philip of Poitou.

Unde factum est quod idem archiepiscopus, ut placeret regi, dedit prædicto magistro Philippo,¹ clerico et familiari regis, præfatum decanatum; et sic orta est discordia inter ipsum archiepiscopum Eboracensem et canonicos suos; cujus hæc fuit origo et initium.

Philip and John propose to the emperor that he shall retain Richard in captivity until Michaelmas.

Quibus auditis, imperator distulit diem liberationis³ regis Angliæ, et alium diem liberationis suæ statuit ei in Purificatione Sanctæ Mariæ, apud Magantum.⁴ The emperor delays the release until Feb. 2.

Interim Gaufridus Eboracensis archiepiscopus, octavo die Natalis Domini, Eboracum venit, et consilio virorum prudentum ministros constituit in metropolitana ecclesia Eboraci, quam vacuam invenit: qui in ipsa ecclesia, sicut decebat, solemniter deservirent. Et hoc ita observatum est, donec canonici et eorum capellani per laicam potestatem et violentiam essent restituti. Post hæc quatuor ex majoribus ecclesiæ, ob prædictam ecclesiæ suspensionem excommunicati, ad regem, tunc temporis liberatum, transfretaverunt; et licentia ab eo accepta, qui commotus fuerat quia archiepiscopus, sicut

² missam] These words are the introit of the feast Ad Vincula S. Petri, August 1. On the 22nd of February is the feast of S. Peter's Chair at Antioch, which has no special service in the Missal, but follows the rite of S. Peter's Chair at Rome, Jan. 18. We must suppose then that Adolf substituted for the service of Jan. 18 that of Aug. 1, by a convenient and courtier-like mistake, on the 22nd of February, on which day it seems most probable that the incident occurred.

Kalendis Aprilis, prima die ejusdem mensis, prædictus rex Angliæ celebravit tertium diem colloquii sui: in quo constituit sibi dari de unaquaque carucata terræ totius Angliæ duos solidos, quod ab antiquis nominatur Temantale.¹ Deinde præcepit quod unusquisque faceret sibi tertiam partem servitii militaris, sicut singulus feodus apportat, ad transfretandum cum illo in Normanniam. Deinde exiebat ab monachis ordinis Cistrensis totam lanam suam de hoc anno; sed quia hoc facere erat eis grave et importabile, fecerunt cum eo finem pecuniarium.

Deinde per consilium et machinationem cancellarii, ut dicitur, Girardus de Camvilla² fuit retatus³ de receptatione prædonum, qui rapuerunt bona mercatorum euntium ad nundinas de Stanford; et ab eo recesserunt ad rapinam illam faciendam, et de rapina illa redierunt ad eum. Præterea appellaverunt eum¹ quod ipse fuit in vi et adjutorio cum comite Johanne, et aliis inimicis regis, ad castella regis de Notingham et de Tikehil capienda. Girardus vero de Camvilla negavit omnia quæ objiciebantur ei ab illis; et illi dederunt vadium de prosequendo, et Girardus dedit vadium de defendendo se per unum de liberis hominibus suis.

³ coronam auream habens in capite] It is worth while remarking that notwithstanding the political significance given to this second coronation of Richard, it was a ceremony different in kind from the first, and far more in itself analogous to the great crown-wearing days of the earlier Norman kings. The king receives the crown from the archbishop privately (Gerv. 1587), and presents himself to the people already crowned and in his royal robes. It is not so much a renewal of his "inauguration" after an eclipse of dignity or even a loss of it, as an assertion that that dignity has undergone no diminution. The day and place recall the Easter crown-wearing of William the Conqueror at Winchester. Gervase was reminded by them of the Canterbury crowning of king Stephen, c. 1588.

Deinde ex communi assensu utriusque regis, Wilhelmus Remensis archiepiscopus, et comes de Neverz, et comes de Bar,³ et magister Anselmus decanus Turo-nensis, et alii multi ex parte regis Franciæ; et Wal-terus Rothomagensis archiepiscopus, et senescallus Nor-manniæ, et constabularius, et alii multi ex parte regis Angliæ, convenerunt prope vallem Rodolei, sexta feria post festum Sancti Barnabæ apostoli, de treugis inter prædictos reges ad invicem firmandis tractatum ha-bituri. Post longam itaque deliberationem inter eos habitam, in hoc tandem convenit: quod treugæ, quæ usque ad finem triennii ex parte regis Franciæ requi-rebantur, tantum per unum annum essent duraturæ; ita quod rex Angliæ teneret, in nullo obnoxius regi Franciæ, omnes terras quas habet in manu propria: et rex Franciæ similiter oppida, quæ occupavit vel tenet, pacifice teneret: et interim liceret utrique illo-rum munire et roborare omnes munitiones quas integras et infractas retinisset, cæteras vero dirutas reædificare interim non liceret eorum alicui. Si quis vero alius, præterquam in castris reædificandis, domos vastatas vel combustas ædificare affectaret, licite posset vel in ædi-ficiis, vel in colligendis segetibus vel aliis fructibus, sibi pacifice providere.

in integrum. Sed quia rex Franciæ volebat quod omnes illi qui ei adhæserant, vel regi Angliæ, claudentur in treugis istis, ita quod a neutro illorum molestarentur, vel quod etiam nemo conversorum in alterutrum hostiliter moveretur, impeditæ sunt treugæ; quia videlicet rex Angliæ violare nolebat consuetudines et leges Pictaviæ, vel aliarum terrarum suarum, in quibus consuetum erat ab antiquo, ut magnates causas proprias invicem gladiis¹ allegarent.

Richard refuses to compel the barons of Poitou to peace.

Et sic imperfecto negotio ab invicem separati sunt omnes qui colloquium illud ceperant, et ex illo die prædicti reges inimiciores facti sunt, et acrius inter se alter adversus alterum congressus est, in rapinis et iniquis combustionibus. Rex quidem Franciæ venit ad civitatem Ebroicarum, et eam penitus subvertit, et ecclesias destruxit, non parcens ætati vel sexui: et reliquias sanctorum inde asportavit. Hæc autem fecit eo quod cives Ebroicenses, relicto eo, reversi fuerant ad fidem et servitium domini sui regis Angliæ.

The conference fails, and the war is renewed.

Philip destroys Evreux.

Cum autem rex Franciæ, destructa civitate Ebroicensi, inde recederet, et ad villam quæ dicitur Freteval veniret, rex Angliæ ad insidias ei parandas venit Vendomiam. Et quia locus ille non erat clausus muro, nec ad defendendum aptus, fecit rex tendere extra villam tentoria sua; et in eis, ita securus ac si esset clausus muro, exspectabat mandatum regis Franciæ, qui mandavit ei quod die illo visitaret illum in manu hostili. Cujus mandatum rex Angliæ lætus suscipiens, renunciavit illi quod ipse exspectaret cum; et nisi venisset, ipse visitaret eum in crastino mane. Quod cum rex Franciæ audisset, non visitavit regem Angliæ illo die.² Mane autem facto rex Angliæ fecit exercitum suum armari, et processit, ut cum exercitu regis Franciæ congrediretur. Quo audito, rex Franciæ et exercitus ejus fugit ante faciem regis Angliæ¹ subsequentis. In fuga autem illa multi de exercitu regis Franciæ interfecti sunt, et multi capti. Captus est etiam regis Franciæ thesaurus magnus, et capella regia, et cartæ universorum hominum regis Angliæ, qui se dederant regi Franciæ, et comiti Johanni, contra eum.

In fuga vero illa rex Franciæ declinavit se a turba, et intravit quandam ecclesiam, ut Missam audiret, longe a recta via. Rex vero Angliæ, nesciens quod rex Franciæ se absconderet, ibat adhuc spirans minarum et cædis in homines regis Franciæ, et quærebat eum, ut morti traderet, vel vivum caperet; et dictum est ei a quodam Flandrensi, quod rex Franciæ jam longe processerat: et ita rex Angliæ deceptus processit in equo velocissimo modicum ultra fines Franciæ et Normanniæ; et deficiente ei equo illo, Marcades princeps Braibancenorum tradidit illi alium equum: et sic rex Angliæ, non invento rege Franciæ, rediit Vendomiam, cum præda magna hominum et equorum, et pecunia magna.

idem episcopus promiserat regi, se traditurum. Sed episcopus id facere distulit, quia nuncius suus, per quem ipse obtulerat regi duo millia marcarum argenti pro comitatu illo cum supradictis castellis sibi retinendo, nondum redierat. Qui cum rediret, attulit secum litteras regis, per quas rex mandavit Hugoni Bardulfi, quod, si prædictus Dunelmensis episcopus fecisset eum securum de illis duabus millibus marcis reddendis, traderet prædicto episcopo prænominatum comitatum cum castellis. Cum igitur litteræ regis traderentur Hugoni Bardulfi, respondit ipse Hugo episcopo Dunelmensi, dicens: "Si vultis ut ego præceptum regis faciam, tradite mihi castella et comitatum,¹ et ego retradam ea vobis, sicut rex præcepit; si feceritis me securum de illis duabus millibus marcis habendis ad opus regis." Cui episcopus Dunelmensis respondit: "Non est opus ut ego vobis ea tradam ad retradendum mihi, quia ego habeo illa et teneo." His auditis, Hugo Bardulfus statim mandavit domino regi responsum episcopi; unde rex iratus præcepit episcopum Dunelmensem dissaisiari de castellis et de comitatu supradictis, et ut duo millia marcarum ab eo exigerentur; præcepit etiam rex in furore iræ suæ, ut ipse Dunelmensis episcopus dissaisiaretur de manerio de Sadberhe,² cum feodis militum et wapentacco, quæ idem rex beato Cutberto, et ecclesiæ Dunelmensi, et præfato episcopo et successoribus ejus dederat in puram et perpetuam eleemosynam, et carta sua confirmaverat, sicut superius notatum est: et factum est ita.

minus papa in eum tulerat propter captionem Ricardi regis Angliæ, nec pœniteret, flagellavit Dominus terram suam in hunc modum. In primum¹ quidem incensæ sunt omnes civitates terræ suæ, nec alicui nota fuit causa incendii. Secundo, ex inundatione Danubii fluvii submersa est quædam terra adjacens, in qua decem millia hominum, vel eo amplius, perierunt. Tertio, cum in media æstate soleat et debeat omnis terra virere, tota terra ejus tunc temporis, contra solitum cursum et debitum, exaruit. Quarto, cum semina frugum deberent in herbam processisse, in vermes conversa sunt. Quinto, nobiliores terræ suæ mortalitate percussi sunt. Et quamvis tot et tantis flagellasset Dominus terram suam plagis, noluit tamen pœnitere; sed induratum est cor ejus, adeo quod ipse juravit, quod omnes obsides regis Angliæ, quos ipse habebat, capitalem subirent sententiam, nisi in proximo perficerentur ei a rege Angliæ omnes conventiones quas cum illo fecerat. Unde factum est quod Baldewinus de Betun, qui unus erat ex illis qui dati fuerant duci Austriæ pro redemptione regis Angliæ obsides, ex communi obsidum consilio missus est ad regem Angliæ ad indicandum ei ducis propositum; qui cum venisset, misertus illorum rex, tradidit ei rex sororem Arturi ducis Britanniæ, et filiam imperatoris Cypri, ad ducendum eas usque ad ducem Austriæ; sororem scilicet Arturi ad maritandam filio ducis Austriæ, et filiam imperatoris de Cypro tradendam in manu ducis Austriæ quietam.

episcopum in universis prædictis capitulis, præsentibus clericis et familiaribus ejusdem archiepiscopi excusantibus eum, in quantum poterant, et dicentibus quod ipse ante illorum citationem prædictus archiepiscopus appellaverat, et iter veniendi ad summum pontificem arripuerat. Quibus auditis, prædictus Lincolniensis episcopus et collegæ sui, diligenter audientes accusationes adversariorum Eboracensis archiepiscopi, et scripto eas commendantes, sub sigillorum suorum testimonio inclusas procuraverunt transmittere summo pontifici, assignantes archiepiscopo Eboracensi spatium trium mensium ex præcepto summi pontificis; et ex proprio beneficio superaddiderunt ei spatium sex hebdomadarum, infra quod se debeat in propria persona apostolico præsentare conspectui; adjungentes quod si ipse hoc non fecerit, sciret se ex tunc ab omni pontificali officio, et archiepiscopatus administratione, auctoritate apostolica suspensum. Et ipsi assignaverunt adversariis archiepiscopi terminum in capite kalendarum Junii, quo sufficienter instructi ad apostolicam sedem accedere debeant, ibi, dante Domino, quod canonicum fuerit accepturi.

Constituti igitur prædicti adversarii archiepiscopi Romæ in præsentia domini papæ ad terminum eis præfixum, instanter accusabant suum archiepiscopum; sed archiepiscopus ad terminum illum non venit, tum propter regis prohibitionem, tum propter aeris corruptionem quæ tunc temporis Romæ est. Clerici vero ejus eodem tempore in curia Romana consistentes, et has causas absentia suæ prætendentes, impetraverunt, ut quicquid contra archiepiscopum post appellationem medio tempore factum fuerat, in irritum revocaretur; et dominus papa præfixit ei terminum veniendi Romam infra octavas Sancti Martini proximo sequentis. Sed quia nec tunc in curia Romana per se vel per sufficientem responsalem comparuit, ad Natale Domini proximo sequens ab omni administratione episcopali suspensus fuit.

In supradicta vero congregacione abbatum facta apud

Eboracum contra archiepiscopum, obiit Rogerus abbas de Selebi, et apud Selebi sepultus est; cui successit Ricardus prior ejusdem domus, dono regis Ricardi, qui benedictionem suam recepit a Huberto Walteri Cantuariensi archiepiscopo, tunc temporis totius Angliæ legato.

Dicitur etiam quod Gaufridus de Muschamp, archidiaconus de Cliveland, recepit chrisma et oleum, sed statim projecit ea in sterquilinio. Cæteri autem canonici ecclesiæ Sancti Petri noluerunt inde recipere; sed miserunt ad Hugonem Lincolnensem episcopum, ut ab eo reciperent oleum et chrisma; sed fraudati sunt a desiderio suo. Petrus enim archidiaconus Lincolnæ, frater Gaufridi archiepiscopi, prohibuit episcopo ne illis oleum et chrisma daret, et super hoc ad Romanum pontificem appellavit.

Solemn

a hermit.

Eodem anno venit quidam heremita ad regem Ri-cardum, et prædicans ei verba salutis æternæ dixit:
“ Esto memor subversionis Sodomæ, et ab illicitis te “ abstine; sin autem, veniet super te ultio digna Dei.”
Sed rex inhians terrenis, et non his quæ Dei sunt, non potuit tam cito animum ab illicitis revocare, nisi datum ei fuisset desuper, vel signum videret. Despiciebat enim personam monentis, non intelligens quod quandoque Dominus revelat parvulis, quæ a sapientibus absconduntur: leprosi etiam nunciaverunt salutem Samarix, et subjugalis Balam² dominum suum revocavit a via illicita. Abiit ergo heremita relicto rege, et ab-scudit se a facie ejus. Procedente autem tempore respueret, tamen ex Divina inspirante gratia memoriter aliquam illius commonitionis partem retinuit, fiduciam habens in Domino, quod Ipse, Qui publicanum et Cananæam revocavit ad pœnitentiam, secundum magnam misericordiam Suam daret ei cor pœnitens. Unde factum est, quod die Martis in hebdomada Paschæ visitavit eum Dominus¹ in virga ferrea, non ut contereret, sed ut flagellatum in Sua reciperet. Flagellavit enim eum Dominus ægritudine magna in die illa, adeo quod ipse convocatis coram se viris religiosis vitæ suæ feditatem confiteri non erubuit, et accepta pœnitentia, mulierem suam, quam a multo tempore non cognoverat, recepit; et abjecto concubitu illicito, adhæsit uxori suæ, et facti sunt duo in carne una; et dedit ei Dominus sanitatem tam corporis quam animæ. O felicem filium, quem Pater cœlestis in hac peregrinatione flagellat ad castigationem, et non ad mortem! corripit enim pater filium nunc blandis, nunc asperis, ut sic vel sic revocet eum ad bene faciendum. Et sic examinat in fornace justitiæ Dominus aurum Suum; sic probat in adversitatibus sanctum Suum, ut eum provehat ad coronam.

Ps. cxlv. 9. Vere magna et inenarrabilia sunt opera Domini, et miserationes Ejus super omnia opera Ejus. Rex enim iste, cujus caput supergressæ erant iniquitates suæ, a Christo adoptatur in filium, et a pravitate sua ad Dominum conversus recipitur in filium. Deus enim, in Cujus manu corda regum sunt, et quocunque voluerit vertit ea, cordi regis instillavit, quod ipse tam cito vitam et conversationem suam mutavit in bonum.

Ps. xxxviii. 4. Ipse enim mane consurgens quotidie, primum quærebat regnum Dei et justitiam Ejus, et ab ecclesia non discedebat, donec more ecclesiastico omne Divinum perageretur officium. Gloriosum siquidem est in principe quotidianos actus suos et ab Eo incipere, et finire in

 magistrum Gervasium cum litteris domini papæ, et suis, episcopi, mandans eis, se illuc ex auctoritate legationis suæ in proximo venturum, ad emendandum ea quæ essent emendanda, et ad statuenda quæ secundum Deum fuerint statuenda; et præcepit eis, ut ipsi convocato clero exhiberent ei, tanquam apostolicæ sedis legato, reverentiam debitam et honorem; adjungens se jam sententiam excommunicationis dedisse in omnes qui in hac parte mandato domini papæ contradicerent.

 Et super hoc misit litteras suas patentes Simoni Ebo-

“(XIV.) Quia sermo Domini est, ‘Sacerdos meus si delinquit, querit, delinquere faciet populum meum; et ruina populi sacerdos nequam,’ exigit tanti ordinis excellentia, ut a publicis potationibus et tabernis sacerdotes abstineant, et qui voto continentiae sunt astricti, nequaquam ad actus turpitudinis se relaxent. Prohibemus igitur ne focarias habeant in domibus suis, nec ad ejectas, in nostrae constitutionis fraudem, accessum in domibus alienis. responderunt, quod archiepiscopus non potuit archidiaconatum illum alicui dare, quia ultra terminum statutum in concilio Lateranensi dare distulit; in quo concilio Alexander papa tertius constituit, quod "cum præbendas, ecclesias, seu quælibet officia in aliqua ecclesia vacare contigerit, non diu maneant in suspenso, sed infra sex menses personis, qui digne administrare valeant, conferantur. Si autem episcopus, ubi ad eum spectaverit, conferre distulerit, per capitulum ordinetur; quod si ad capitulum electio pertinuerit, et infra præscriptum terminum hoc non fecerit, episcopus secundum Deum, cum religiosorum virorum consilio exequatur: aut si omnes forte neglexerint, metropolitani de episcopis¹ secundum Deum absque illorum contradictione disponat."² Hujus ergo dispositionis auctoritate, et privilegii sui munimine a Cælestino papa tertio ecclesiæ Eboracensi indulto, asserebant præfatus decanus et capitulum Eboracense, quod ad illos spectat donatio prædicti archidiaconatus et aliorum reddituum vacantium in ecclesia Eboracensi, quos archiepiscopus suus non dederat in fixum Lateranensis concilii terminum; sed officiales Eboracensis archiepiscopi, scilicet, magister Gyrardus de Rowelle, et magister Honorius,³ appellaverunt contra privilegium illud, et appellationem, quam dominus eorum archiepiscopus in recessu suo fecerat pro statu ecclesiæ suæ, renovaverunt coram legato et toto concilio; et quamvis in privilegio illo continebatur, "remota appellatione," tamen legatus detulit appellationi officialium Eboracensis archiepiscopi.

quirendum qualem succursum, et quantum, et ubi, et quando imperator ei faceret contra regem Franciæ. Notum enim erat regi Angliæ, quod prædictus imperator super omnia desiderabat, ut regnum Franciæ Romanorum imperio subjaceret; et exinde conjiciebat rex Angliæ, quod si imperator et rex Franciæ confederarentur, totum in detrimentum suum redundaret. Rex vero Franciæ sciens quod cancellarius regis Angliæ per terram suam transiret, apposuit apprehendere illum; sed fraudatus a desiderio, suo mandavit regi Angliæ treugam dissolutam; et statim concurrentes utriusque exercitus damna fecerunt hinc et inde maxima, in¹ interfectione hominum, et in rapinis, et in incendiis. Rex autem Franciæ videns se nequaquam defendere posse contra regem Angliæ, castella multa Normanniæ subvertit, quæ rex Angliæ postmodum refirmavit, et fortiora fecit quam prius fuerant.

Quod cum rex Franciæ et rex Angliæ audissent, convenerunt ad colloquium de pace inter eos facienda, in quo inter eos convenit in hunc modum: quod Lodovicus, filius et hæres regis Franciæ, duceret in uxorem sororem Arturi ducis Britanniæ, neptem præfati regis Angliæ; et ipse rex Angliæ quietam clamaret eis et hæredibus eorum Gysortium, et Neafle, et Baudemunt, cum Wougesin³ Normannico, et Vernun, et Yveri,⁴ et Pasci, et insuper daret eis viginti millia marcarum argenti; et hæc contra rex Franciæ quietam clamaret regi Angliæ omnia quæ sibi petebat in comite de Engolismo, et redderet ei comitatum de Albemarlia, et comitatum de Auco, et castellum de Arches, et alia castella multa, quæ ceperat super eum in Normannia et in aliis terris suis per guerram. Anno gratiæ millesimo centesimo nonagesimo sexto, qui est annus septimus regni Ricardi regis Angliæ, idem rex fuit apud Pictavim die Natalis Domini, quæ feria secunda evenit. Et Hubertus Cantuariensis archiepiscopus, totius Angliæ justitiarius, et apostolicæ sedis legatus, fuit eodem die apud Eboracum, missus ex parte regis loqui cum Willelmo rege Scottorum de matrimonio contrahendo inter Othonem filium Henrici ducis Saxonie, nepotem Ricardi regis Angliæ, et Margaretam filiam suam. Convenerat enim inter Ricardum regem Angliæ, et Willelmum regem Scotiæ, quod idem rex Scotiæ daret prædicto Othoni Margaretam filiam suam in uxorem cum toto¹ Loennais; et quod rex Angliæ daret Othoni, et filiæ regis Scotiæ, et hæredibus eorum, totam Northymbriam et comitatum Carleoli;² et rex Angliæ haberet in custodia totum Loennais³ cum castellis suis; et rex Scotiæ haberet in custodia totam Northymbriam et comitatum Carleoli⁴ cum castellis suis. Sed quia regina Scottorum tunc temporis prægnans erat, noluit rex Scotiæ stare prædictæ conventioni, sperans quod Dominus daret ei filium.

Eodem anno, quinto Natalis Domini die, Bertramnus,⁵ Dunelmensis ecclesiæ prior, occurrit Huberto Cantuariensi archiepiscopo apud Alvertonam; et ibi coram eo elegit magistrum Philippum clericum et familiarem Ricardi regis Angliæ, in Dunelmensem episcopum.

Eodem anno⁶ Cælestinus papa, ad instantiam nunciorum decani et canonicorum Eboraci, in hac forma scripsit prædicto Simoni, Eboracensis ecclesiæ decano;

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the present Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendations of the Committees of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls:—

CALENDARIUM GENEALOGICUM; for the Reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. Edited by CHARLES ROBERTS, Esq., Secretary of the Public Record Office. 2 Vols. 1865.

This is a work of great value for elucidating the early history of our nobility and landed gentry.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGNS OF EDWARD VI., MARY, and ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by ROBERT LEMON, Esq., F.S.A. 1856-1865.
Vol. I.—1547-1580. | Vol. II.—1581-1590.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH (continued), preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 1867-1869.
Vol. III.—1591-1594. | Vol. V.—1598-1601.
Vol. IV.—1595-1597. |

Of the above series, five volumes are published, extending from 1547 to 1601.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF JAMES I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 1857-1859.
Vol. I.—1603-1610. | Vol. III.—1619-1623.
Vol. II.—1611-1618. | Vol. IV.—1623-1625, with Addenda.

Mrs. Everett Green has completed a Calendar of the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I. in four volumes. The mass of historical matter thus rendered accessible to investigation is large and important. It throws new light on the Gunpowder-plot; the rise and fall of Somerset; the particulars connected with the Overbury murder; the disgrace of Sir Edward Coke; and other matters connected with the reign.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF CHARLES I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by JOHN BRUCE, Esq., F.S.A. 1858-1869.
Vol. I.—1625-1626. | Vol. VII.—1634-1635.
Vol. II.—1627-1628. | Vol. VIII.—1635.
Vol. III.—1628-1629. | Vol. IX.—1635-1636.
Vol. IV.—1629-1631. | Vol. X.—1636-1637.
Vol. V.—1631-1633. | Vol. XI.—1637.
Vol. VI.—1633-1634. | Vol. XII.—1637-1638.

This Calendar is in continuation of that of the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I., and will extend to the Restoration of Charles II. It now comprises the first fourteen years of the reign of Charles I., but is in active progress towards completion, presenting notices of a large number of original documents of great value to all inquirers into the history of the period to which it relates. Many of these documents have been hitherto unknown.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF CHARLES II., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 1860-1866.
Vol. I.—1660-1661. | Vol. V.—1665-1666.
Vol. II.—1661-1662. | Vol. VI.—1666-1667.
Vol. III.—1663-1664. | Vol. VII.—1667.
Vol. IV.—1664-1665. |

Seven volumes, of the period between 1660 and 1667, have been published.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to SCOTLAND, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARKHAM JOHN THORPE, Esq., of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. 1858.
Vol. I., the Scottish Series, of the Reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, 1509-1589.
Vol. II., the Scottish Series, of the Reign of Elizabeth, 1589-1603; an Appendix to the Scottish Series, 1543-1592; and the State Papers relating to Mary Queen of Scots during her Detention in England, 1568-1587.

The above two volumes of State Papers relate to Scotland, and embrace the period between 1509 and 1603. In the second volume are notices of the State Papers relating to Mary Queen of Scots.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND, OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY VIII., EDWARD VI., MARY, AND ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by HANS CLAUDE HAMILTON, Esq., F.S.A. 1860-1867.

Vol. I.—1509-1573. | Vol. II.—1574-1585.

The above have been published under the editorship of Mr. Hans Claude Hamilton; another volume is in progress.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, COLONIAL SERIES, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, and elsewhere. Edited by W. NOEL SAINSBURY, Esq. 1860-1862.

Vol. I.—America and West Indies, 1574-1660.

Vol. II.—East Indies, China, and Japan, 1513-1616.

These volumes include an analysis of Colonial Papers in the Public Record Office, the India Office, and the British Museum.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS AND PAPERS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC, OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, the British Museum, &c. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1862-1867.

Vol. I.—1509-1514.

Vol. II. (in Two Parts)—1515-1518.

Vol. III. (in Two Parts)—1519-1523.

These volumes contain summaries of all State Papers and Correspondence relating to the reign of Henry VIII., in the Public Record Office, of those formerly in the State Paper Office, in the British Museum, the Libraries of Oxford and Cambridge, and other Public Libraries; and of all letters that have appeared in print in the works of Burnet, Strype, and others. Whatever authentic original material exists in England relative to the religious, political, parliamentary, or social history of the country during the reign of Henry VIII., whether despatches of ambassadors, or proceedings of the army, navy, treasury, or ordinance, or records of Parliament, appointments of officers, grants from the Crown, &c., will be found calendared in these volumes.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD VI., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. 1547-1553. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF MARY, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. 1553-1558. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

The two preceding volumes exhibit the negotiations of the English ambassadors with the courts of the Emperor Charles V. of Germany, of Henry II. of France, and of Philip II. of Spain. The affairs of several of the minor continental states also find various incidental illustrations of much interest.

A valuable series of Papers descriptive of the circumstances which attended the loss of Calais merits a special notice; while the progress of the wars in the north of France, into which England was dragged by her union with Spain, is narrated at some length. The domestic affairs of England are of course passed over in these volumes, which treat only of its relations with foreign powers.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF ELIZABETH, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, &c. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863-1869.

Vol. I.—1558-1559.

Vol. II.—1559-1560.

Vol. III.—1560-1561.

Vol. IV.—1561-1562.

Vol. V.—1562.

Vol. VI.—1563.

These six volumes contain a calendar of the Foreign Correspondence of Queen Elizabeth, from her accession in 1558, to 1563, of which the originals, drafts, or contemporary copies, are deposited in the Public Record Office, &c. These documents are of the greatest value as exhibiting the position of England at one of the most interesting periods of history, in regard to its relations with France, Scotland, Spain, and Germany. They are of especial importance as illustrating not only the external but also the domestic affairs of France during the period which immediately preceded the outbreak of the first great war of religion under the Prince of Condé and the Duke of Guise.

CALENDAR OF TREASURY PAPERS, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Vol. I.—1557-1696. Edited by JOSEPH REDINGTON, Esq. 1868.

The Papers connected with the administration of the affairs of the Treasury, from 1556-7 to 1696, comprising petitions, reports, and other documents relating to services rendered to the State, grants of money and pensions, appointments to offices, remissions of fines and duties, &c., are calendared in this volume. They illustrate civil and military events, financial and other matters, the administration in Ireland and the Colonies, &c., and afford information nowhere else recorded.

CALENDAR OF THE CAREW PAPERS, preserved in the Lambeth Library. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London; and WILLIAM BULLEN, Esq. 1867-1870.

Vol. I.—1515-1574.

Vol. II.—1575-1588.

Vol. III.—1589-1600.

Vol. IV.—1601-1603.

The Carew Papers relating to Ireland deposited in the Lambeth Library are not only unique in themselves, but are of great importance. Four volumes of the Calendar of these valuable Papers have been published, extending from 1515 to 1603, which cannot fail to be welcome to all students of Irish history. Another volume is in the press.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS, DESPACHES, AND STATE PAPERS, relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives at Simancas, and elsewhere. Edited by G. A. BERGENROTH. 1862-1868.

Vol. I.—Hen. VII.—1485-1509.

Vol. II.—Hen. VIII.—1509-1525.

Supplement to Vol. I. and Vol. II.

Mr. Bergenroth was engaged in compiling a Calendar of the Papers relating to England preserved in the archives of Simancas in Spain, and the corresponding portion removed from Simancas to Paris. Mr. Bergenroth also visited Madrid, and examined the Papers there, bearing on the reign of Henry VIII. The first volume contains the Spanish Papers of the reign of Henry VII.; the second volume, those of the first portion of the reign of Henry VIII. The Supplement contains new information relating to the private life of Queen Katharine of England; and to the projected marriage of Henry VII. with Queen Juana, widow of King Philip of Castile, and mother of the Emperor Charles V.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, relating to ENGLISH AFFAIRS, preserved in the Archives of Venice, &c. Edited by RAWDON BROWN, Esq. 1864-1869.

Vol. I.—1202-1509,

Vol. II.—1509-1519,

Vol. III.—1520-1526,

Of the Papers in the Venetian archives, Mr. Rawdon Brown has published three volumes of his Calendar, extending from 1202 to 1526, and has made considerable progress in the fourth volume. Mr. Brown's researches have brought to light a number of important documents relating to the various periods of English history, and his contributions to historical literature are of the most interesting and important character.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional knowledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 a plan for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (being written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house; and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom. The work is printed for the first time.

3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduvardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines, addressed to Allanor, Queen of Henry III., and probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author. The second is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. It does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, but is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time. The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

4. MONUMENTA FRANCISCANA; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical information could be found in this country, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these have been before printed.

5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO. Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from being the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. When written, the disputes of the school-men had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries. Wycliff's little bundles of tracts are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The work gives a good idea of the controversies at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLES OF SCOTLAND; OR, A METRICAL VERSION OF THE HISTORY OF HECTOR BOECE; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1838.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed. The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version, and the student of language will find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446, which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II., and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS, by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1415, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The author was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. EULOGIUM (HISTORIARUM SIVE TEMPORIS): Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad ANNUM Domini 1866; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858-1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367. A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books, and contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andræ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

The contents of these volumes are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works are printed for the first time.

12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS; Liber Albus, Liber Customarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Customarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. It gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Customarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the Record Room of the City of London, though some portion in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A COLLECTION OF POLITICAL POEMS AND SONGS RELATING TO ENGLISH HISTORY, FROM THE ACCESSION OF EDWARD III. TO THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1859-1861.

These Poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are various in character; some are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another. The period comprised is in itself interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable value to the philologist.

15. The "OPUS TERTIUM," "OPUS MINUS," &c., of ROGER BACON. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—never before printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon; also a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologiae."

16. BARTHOLOMÆI DE COTTON, MONACHI NORWICENSIS, HISTORIA ANGLICANA; 449-1298: necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. BRUT Y TYWYSOGION; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

This work, also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A COLLECTION OF ROYAL AND HISTORICAL LETTERS DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY IV. 1399-1404. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGERTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events. The period requires much elucidation; to which it will materially contribute.

19. THE REPRESSOR OF OVER MUCH BLAMING OF THE CLERGY. By REGINALD PECCOCK, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological discussion of which our English prose literature can boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and against their general doctrines the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward—persecution.

20. ANNALES CAMBRÆ. Edited by the Rev. JOHN WILLIAMS AB ITHEL, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout though brief, are valuable. The annals were probably written at St. Davids, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861–1868.

The first three volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use. Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185–6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon. The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about the year 1188, and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of acts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

Vol. VI. contains the Itinerarium Kambrie et Descriptio Kambriae.

22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861-1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impériale, and the Dépôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In the present edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1861-1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and a large portion of them is printed for the first time. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop.

26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066-1200. By THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862-1865.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages; the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated, from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III. Vol. I., 1216-1235. Vol. II., 1236-1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862-1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly in the Tower of London, and now in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of them, especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is printed for the first time.

28. CHRONICA MONASTERII S. ALBANI.—1. THOMÆ WALSINGHAM HISTORIA ANGLICANA; Vol. I., 1272-1381: Vol. II., 1381-1422. 2. WILLELMI RISHANGER CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1307. 3. JOHANNIS DE TROKELowe ET HENRICI DE BLANEFORDE CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259-1296; 1307-1324; 1392-1406. 4. GESTA ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, A THOMA WALSINGHAM, REGNANTE RICARDO SECUNDO, EJUSDEM ECCLESIE PRÆCENTORE, COMPILATA; Vol. I., 793-1290: Vol. II., 1290-1349: Vol. III., 1349-1411. 5. JOHANNIS AMUNDESHAM, MONACHI MONASTERII S. ALBANI, UT VIDETUR, ANNALES; Vol. I. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1870.

In the first two volumes is a history of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., written by Thomas Walsingham, precentor of St. Albans and prior of the cell of Wymundham, belonging to that abbey. Walsingham's work is printed from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, from 1259 to 1306, attributed to William Rishanger, monk of Saint Albans, who lived in the reign of Edward I., printed from the Cottonian Manuscript, Faustina B. IX. (of the fourteenth century) in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219-231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cottonian Manuscript Claudius E. III., fols. 306-331: Also an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol by King Edward I., 1291-1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., attributed to William Rishanger above mentioned, but on no sufficient ground: A short Chronicle of English History, from 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A short Chronicle from 1297 to 1307, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with an addition of Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1299, 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1295 to 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: and a fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1285 to 1307, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Annals of King Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henricus de Blaneфорde, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A full Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer of St. Albans, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and an account of the benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the same Library.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh volumes (which form an entirely separate work), contain a history of the Abbots of St. Albans, and of the fortunes and vicissitudes of the house, from 793 to 1411, mainly compiled by Thomas Walsingham, Præcentor of the Abbey in the reign of Richard II., and transcribed from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum; with a brief Continuation of the History, extracted from the closing pages of the Parker MS. No. VII., in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

The eighth volume is in continuation of the Annals, containing a Chronicle, supposed to have been written by John Amundesham, a monk of that monastery.

29. CHRONICON ABBATIE EVESHAMENSIS, AUCTORIBUS DOMINICO PRIORE EVESHAMLE ET THOMA DE MARLEBERGE ABBATE, A FUNDATIONE AD ANNUM 1213, UNA CUM CONTINUATIONE AD ANNUM 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is for the first time printed.

30. RICARDI DE CIRENCESTRIA SPECULUM HISTORIALE DE GESTIS REGUM ANGLIE. Vol. I., 447-871. Vol. II., 872-1066. Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863-1869.

The compiler, Richard of Cirencester, was a monk of Westminster, 1355-1400. In 1391 he obtained a licence to make a pilgrimage to Rome. His history, in four books, extends from 447 to 1066. He announces his intention of continuing it, but there is no evidence that he completed any more. This chronicle gives many charters in favour of Westminster Abbey, and a very full account of the lives and miracles of the saints, especially of Edward the Confessor, whose reign occupies the fourth book. A treatise on the Coronation, by William of Sudbury, a monk of Westminster, fills book iii. c. 3. It was on this author that C. J. Bertram fathered his forgery, De Situ Britannia, in 1747.

31. YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 20-21, 30-31, and 32-33. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1866.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. NARRATIVES OF THE EXPULSION OF THE ENGLISH FROM NORMANDY; 1449-1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normandie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conférences

between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. HISTORIA ET CARTULARIUM MONASTERII S. PETRI GLOUCESTRIE. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. HART, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863-1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester. The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. ALEXANDRI NECKAM DE NATURIS RERUM LIBRI DUO; with NECKAM'S POEM, DE LAUDIBUS DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century. In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; but he neither can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities." Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century. The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientie" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. LEECHDOMS, WORTCUNNING, AND STARCRAFT OF EARLY ENGLAND; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. OSWALD COCKAYNE, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864-1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. I.:—Annales de Margan, 1066-1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066-1263; Annales de Burton, 1004-1263. Vol. II.:—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519-1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1-1291. Vol. III.:—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1-1297; Annales Monasterii de Bermundescia, 1042-1432. Vol. IV.:—Annales Monasterii de Oseneia, 1016-1347; Chronicon vulgo dictum Chronicon Thomæ Wykes, 1066-1289; Annales Prioratus de

Wigornia, 1-1377. Vol. V. :—Index and Glossary. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registry of the University, Cambridge. 1864-1869.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are ten in number. The extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are printed for the first time.

37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rév. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and, being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man, who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs. The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities he was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186; he died on the 16th of November 1200; and was canonized in 1220.

38. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST. Vol. I. :—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI. Vol. II. :—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864-1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. RECUEIL DES CRONIQUES ET ANCHIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRETAGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN. Vol. I., Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399-1422. Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq. F.S.A. 1864-1868.

40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAURIN. Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding Vol. I.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of the work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1865-1869.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation, and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion, is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land. To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVRE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVRE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livre de Reis de Engleterre." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866-1868.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. MATHÆI PARIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I., II., and III. 1067-1253. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866-1869.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris) giving fuller details, which has been called the 'Historia Major.' The chronicle here published, nevertheless, gives some information not to be found in the greater history.

45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 455-1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by EDWARD EDWARDS, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources, which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from, writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments.

There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO 1135; WITH A SUPPLEMENT, CONTAINING THE EVENTS FROM 1141 TO 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are the invasions of foreigners and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1866-1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., and in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars. The language is singularly corrupt, and a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, OR, THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses. The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. THE CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169-1192; known under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions of the first importance to the student.

50. MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

This work will supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

51. CHRONICA MAGISTRI ROGERI DE HOVEDENE. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868-1870.

This work has long been justly celebrated, but not thoroughly understood until Mr. Stubbs' edition. The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little, and not always judiciously. From 1170 to 1192 is the portion which corresponds with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49); but it is not a copy, being sometimes an abridgment, at others a paraphrase; occasionally the two works entirely agree, showing that both writers had access to the same materials, but dealt with them differently. From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work; it is extremely valuable, and an authority of the first importance.

52. WILLELMI MALMESBURIENSIS MONACHI DE GESTIS PONTIFICUM ANGLORUM LIBRI QUINQUE. Edited, from William of Malmesbury's Autograph MS., by N. E. S. A. HAMILTON, Esq., of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1870.

William of Malmesbury's "Gesta Pontificum" is the principal foundation of English Ecclesiastical Biography, down to the year 1122. The manuscript which has been followed in this Edition is supposed by Mr. Hamilton to be the author's autograph, containing his latest additions and amendments.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, or the GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086 ; fac-simile of the Part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861-1863) boards. Price 4s. 6d. to 1l. 1s. each Part, according to size ; or, bound in 2 Vols., 18l.

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each according to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Cnut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place ; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor ; the present possessor ; how many hides were in the manor ; how many ploughs were in demesne ; how many homagers ; how many villeins ; how many cottars ; how many serving men ; how many free tenants ; how many tenants in soccage ; how much wood, meadow, and pasture ; the number of mills and fish-ponds ; what had been added or taken away from the place ; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor ; the present value ; and how much each free-man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward ; who then held it ; its value in the time of the late king ; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, " it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, " nor a swine was left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., director of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton. The fac-simile was completed in 1863.

*For some reason left unexplained, many parts were left unsurveyed ; Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Durham, are not described in the survey ; nor does Lancashire appear under its proper name ; but Furness, and the northern part of Lancashire, as well as the south of Westmoreland, with a part of Cumberland, are included within the West Riding of Yorkshire. That part of Lancashire which lies between the Ribble and Mersey, and which at the time of the survey comprehended 688 manors, is joined to Cheshire. Part of Rutland is described in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln.

Part I. (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.). 1865.

Part II. (Henry VIII. and Edward VI.). 1866.

Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth). 1867.

Part IV. (James I. to Anne). 1868.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey. The fourth Part concludes the series, and comprises a number of documents taken from the originals belonging to the Constable of the Tower of London; also several records illustrative of the Gunpowder Plot, and a woodcut containing portraits of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., circulated by their adherents in England, 1580-8.
